ho SIR:

On Tuesday, 11-23-76, at 1217 Hours, I responded to a working fire, at 3536 Hildana Rd., Shaker Hts., Ohio, as reported by Lt. Gardner, from a passing motorist.

On arrival Ptl'n. Chipps, Patn. Narducci and myself, made an attempt to see if there were any signs of life in each suite of the two-family. Going through the first floor, no one could be located. Trying upstairs, we were unable to gain entrance, due to the intense smoke, in the hallway area. At that we gave way to Shaker Hts. Fire Dept.

Fire Squad arrived on scene putting out fire and clearing the air of smoke. After the smoke cleared, the body of a black male, DONALD L. DAVIS, 090849, of 3536 Hildana Rd., phone: 921-6226, was found draped over a chair, face down, by Fireman Dennis Talboo, of Squad I. TALBOO pulled victim from chair and laid same on floor, where it was apparent that victim was expired.

The chair in which the body was found was ten feet from the most severe burn area, around the couch. (See Diagram).

Victim's body had only a few burn places on it, and the clothing was still intact.

MR. DARREL SMITH, of the Coroner's Office was notified, and made aware of the circumstances, and they sent first call ambulance to get the body. Photos were taken by Pat'l'n. Narducci.

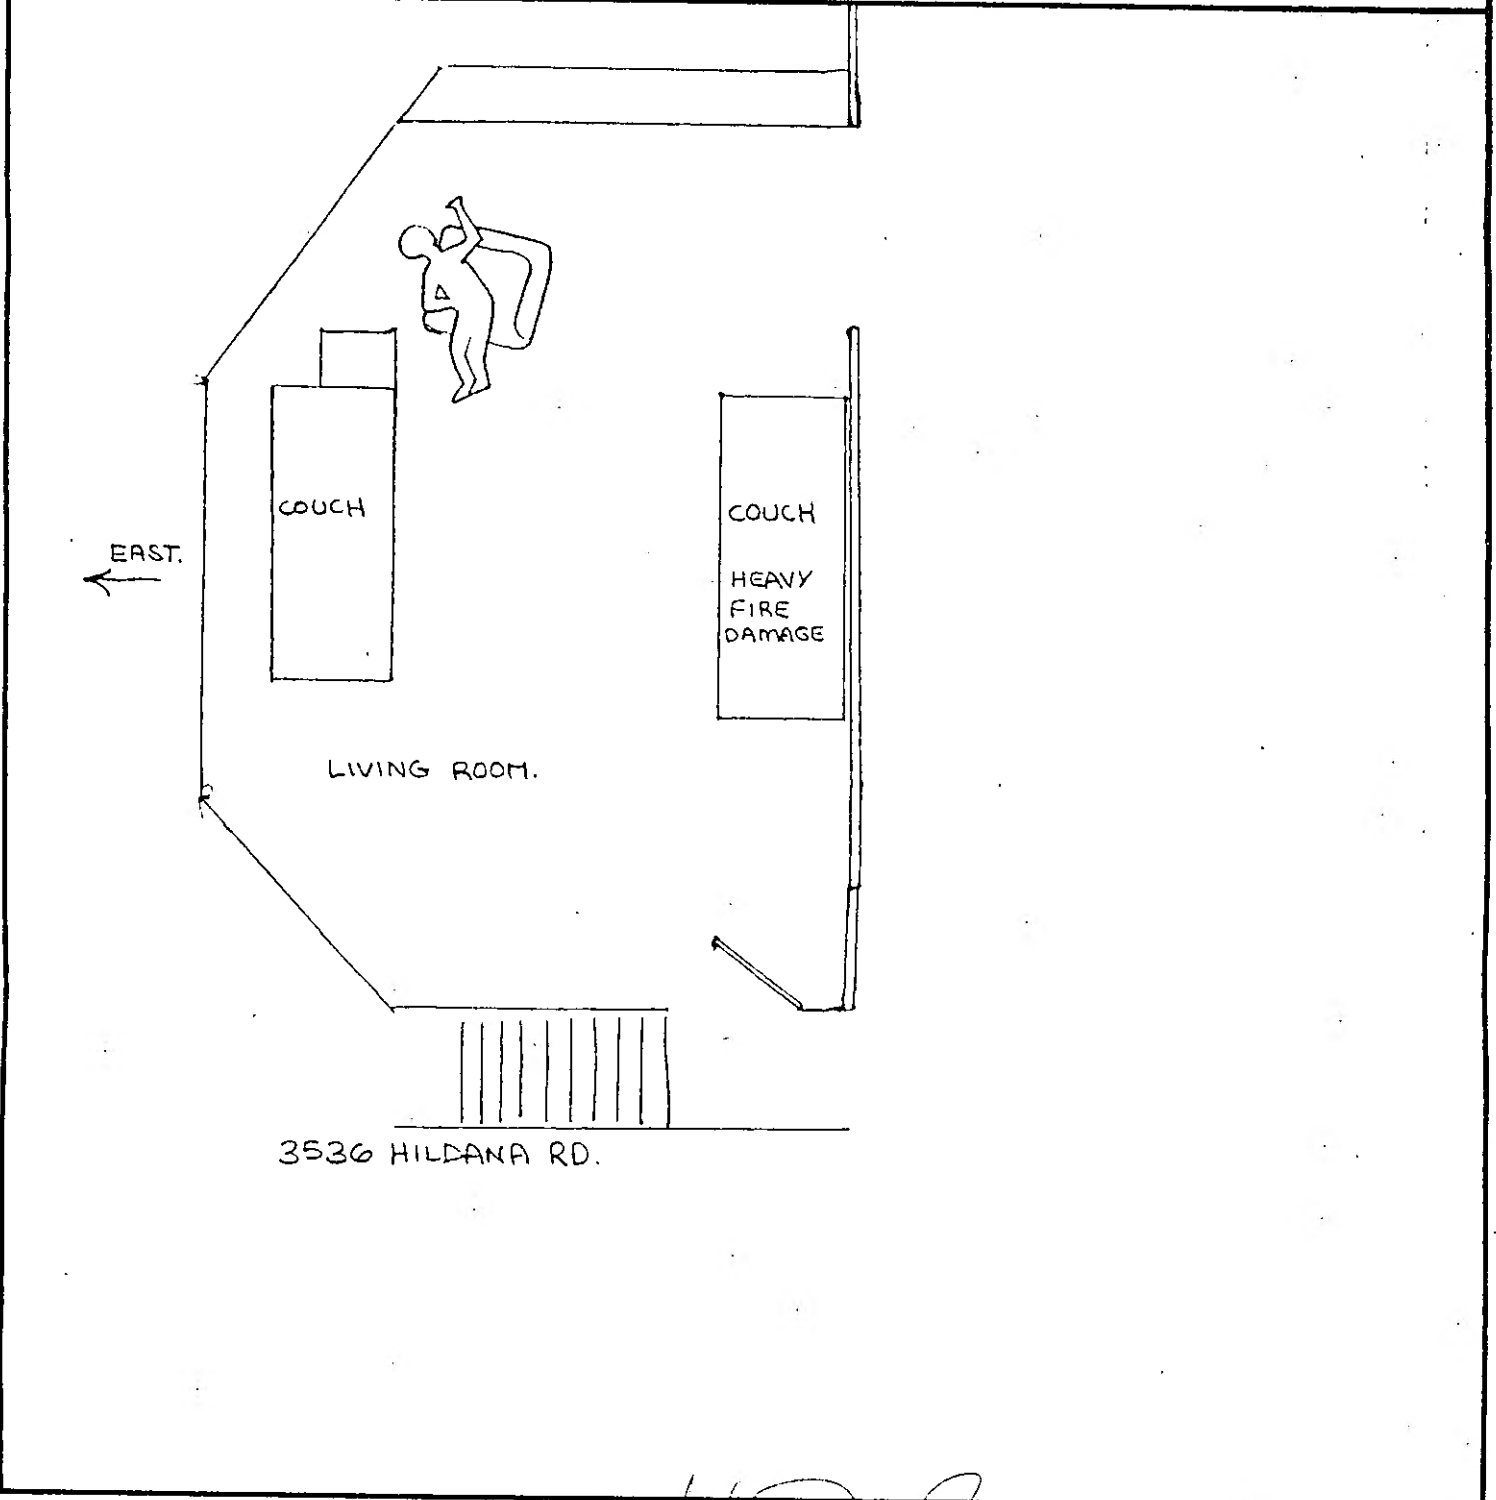

Victim resides at that residence with a EUNICE K. ROBINSON, age 31, and her four kids, of which none were at home.

It was stated by EDWARD DAVIS, age 28, of 4493 Glenview Dr., phone: 921-6226, that his brother, DONALD, was a heavy drinker, and this was also mentioned by his aunt, ANNIE BELL DAVIS, (same address as brother Edward), who said she last talked to victim this date at approximately 1030 hrs., and that he appeared to have been drinking at time of conversation.

EUNICE K. ROBINSON spoke with Det. Barnum and could add nothing to report, other than speaking with victim on phone at about 1030 hrs. this date.

THE NOI SEEKS A SEPARATE BLACK NATION, ESPOUSES ITS OWN VERSION OF THE ISLAMIC RELIGION, AND HAS CONSIDERED ALL "WHITES" TO BE DEVILS; HOWEVER, WALLACE D. MUHAMMAD IN AN INTERVIEW PUBLISHED IN "MUHAMMAD SPEAKS," MARCH 21, 1975, SAME BEING A WEEKLY AND THE OFFICIAL NOI NEWSPAPER, STATED THERE WOULD NO LONGER BE STRESS PUT ON THE WHITE PEOPLE'S STATUS AS "DEVILS"; THAT WHITES HAVE "BEGUN TO REFORM" AND "THE PAST IS THE PAST UNTIL IT IS DUG UP.

NOI ACTIVITY IS WIDESPREAD AMONG BLACK INMATES IN MANY PRISONS IN THE UNITED STATES. IN RECENT YEARS INTERNAL DISSIDENCE AND DIFFICULTIES WITH RIVAL MUSLIM GROUPS AND OTHER ADVERSARIES HAVE PRODUCED CONSIDERABLE VIOLENCE, SOME INVOLVING PHYSICAL CONFRONTATIONS AND ACTS OF VIOLENCE WITH LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES.

CECILE VON GOETZE, 5480 WISCONSIN AVENUE, N.W., APARTMENT 520, WASHINGTON, D.C. (WDC), WHO WAS HELD HOSTAGE AT THE ISLAMIC CENTER, 2521 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE, N.W., PROVIDED THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION:

Washington: Must More Die?

Must more innocent people die in a religious sect's quest for vengeance, now in progress in Washington?

In 1973, seven members of the Hanafi sect of Muslims were killed in Washington by men associated with another sect, the Black Muslims. The dead included three grandchildren of Reginald Hawkins, a Charlotte dentist, minister and civil rights activist; his daughter is the wife of the Hanafi leader, Abdul Khaalis.

Five men convicted in the killings are now serving long prison sentences. But Abdul Khaalis, whose wife was shot five times in the 1973 raid, wants to deal with them and their supporters himself. That is one of the demands he says must be met if his hostages are released.

So far only one person has died — an innocent bystander. Other innocent people have been wounded; the hostages, perhaps a hundred of them, also have done no wrong to their captors.

It is difficult to speak of justice to a man whose wife is paralyzed and whose children are dead as a result of an attack by madmen. But the wrong done him does not justify the killing of innocent people. In his quest for revenge, Abdul Kaalis is showing no more regard for the lives of innocent people than his enemies showed for the lives of his loved ones. As is almost always the case, senseless killing only produces more senseless killing.

"As a minister, I cannot condone violence," Rev. Hawkins said Wednesday. "My concern is the safety of all of them." So is ours.

Terrorism Is Both Old, New In U.S.

By SAUL FRIEDMAN
Observer Washington Bureau

"... one means ... wins the easiest victory over reason: terror and force."

— Adolf Hitler, Mein Kampf

WASHINGTON — They used to come here with the first touch of spring — marchers for jobs, civil rights, an end to abortion and the Vietnam War.

But this year there was only a quiet group of women, the wives of tuna fishermen come to protest government fishing regulations.

And there was something new — a band of Hanafi Moslem zealots holding a city in a siege of terror.

It is as if the relative calm that settled over the country since the '60s and '70s has ended mass demonstrations but left the climate for individual terrorism.

Indeed, exactly a week before the Hanafis, wielding guns and machetes, took hostages and three Washington buildings, a Justice Department task force report warned that an end to the mass demonstrations of discontent could lead to an increase in isolated terror.

Protests of the past, said the Task Force on Disorders and Terrorism, were "directed at modifying our system of government, not at overthrowing it."

But in this time of quiet in America, discontent and frustration remain beneath the surface among individuals and groups, the task force said.

Meanwhile, terrorism has increased abroad among groups such as the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Black September Group and the Irish Republican Army's Provisional Wing.

"Mindful of the events that have shaken the domestic peace in other countries," the report said, "this country must take terrorist threats very seriously indeed."

The siege of downtown Washington fits the definition the task force warned against: "A tactic or technique by means of which a violent act or the threat thereof is used for the prime purpose of creating overwhelming fear for coercive purposes."

When some principle, however twisted, rather than personal gain, provides the motive for terror, the task force report said, the "criminal behavior" becomes political terrorism.

Such terrorism is not new in the United States.

Before the Declaration of Independence was signed, American colonists ambushed British soldiers and scalped them to produce terror in Redcoat ranks.

Terror was the slaveholders' best weapon to control their slaves.

American Indians used guerrilla warfare and terror in a vain effort to discourage settlement of the West. And the Ku Klux Klan, beginning in the 19th century, used terror to neutralize the effects of the Emancipation Proclamation.

What is new in terror is the technology available to the individual terrorist and the tactic of taking hostages.

Thus, with the help of television and radio, one terrorist or a tiny gang holding one hostage and armed, perhaps, with modern explosives and weapons can paralyze an airline, bank, city or government.

"What is terrorism to some is heroism to others," said the task force.

Terrorist Leader Volatile

Rage Can Replace Calm In An Instant

By WILLIAM EATON
Observer Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, apparent leader of the Hanafi Moslem terrorists, is a man whose moods can swing from serenity to outrage in the flash of an eye.

Khaalis

They can be as different as his Islamic name and the name he was given at his birth 54 years ago in Gary, Ind. — Ernest Timothy McGhee.

Before he led a bloody seizure of dozens of hostages, his associates invariably described him as a peaceful apostle of nonviolence.

But Khaalis quickly warned that "heads will roll" unless his demands — including seeing five men convicted of murdering members of his family in 1973 — were met.

"I'm like the moon — one side you see, one side you don't see" Khaalis once said.

Dr. Reginald Hawkins of Charlotte, father of one of Khaalis's two wives, said he never knew him to be violent.

"He is a very religious man who suffered a great deal of hurt," Hawkins said. "I think he is a man who reached a stress point."

Three of Hawkins's grandchildren died in the 1973 slaying.

Khaalis has spent the past 25 years in religious activities, first with the Black Muslims and then with the Hanafi Moslems.

He began his adult life as a jazz drummer. He played with Charlie Parker and other big bands in New York before he put down his sticks and took up religion.

Khaalis attended public schools in Gary and went to Purdue University for a year before joining the Army in 1941.

He said he felt the sting of racial discrimination when the Marines rejected his application because he was black. Navy recruiters told him he could serve only as a steward.

He studied at the Chicago Conservatory of Music and became a musician, moving to New York to follow his career.

In 1951, however, he joined the Harlem Mosque of the Black Muslims and went to its Chicago headquarters three years later.

Khaalis was promoted to be secretary of the organization headed by Elijah Muhammad. He has told reporters in the past, however, that he was a "counteragent" seeking only to convert the Black Muslims to orthodox Muslim beliefs.

In 1958, he left the organization in a split with its leaders, then returned to New York where he became friendly with Malcolm X, the Black Muslim dissident who was slain in 1965.

Working in New York, he met a young Macalester College graduate, the former Paulette Hawkins, a civil rights activist and daughter of the Charlotte dentist.

A few years later, she became his second wife — Islamic custom allows up to four — and changed her name to Bibi.

Here's A Guide To The Names And Religions

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Occupation of Washington buildings by Hanafi Moslems has produced a bewildering flurry of names and religious sects.

Here is a look at some of the more frequently mentioned groups and individuals:

• Moslems: There are 700 million adherents of Islam worldwide. The religion was founded by the prophet Muhammad in 622. Islam has two major sects — the Sunni, who believe the successor to the prophet Muhammad should be elected, and the Shia, who believe the successor should follow bloodlines.

Ali

• Hanafi Moslems: This is a small, mostly black group within the Sunni sect. It was founded by, Ham-aas Abdul Khaalis, leader of the terrorists, about 10 years ago in New York City. The Hanafis, who number about 1,000, consider themselves the only true followers of Islam. They follow a literal interpretation of the Koran and oppose racism.

Elijah

• The World Community of Islam in the West: Once known and still frequently called the Black Muslims. It was founded in Detroit in 1931 by W.D. Fard, a black itinerant who preached in Detroit until he vanished in 1933.

• Elijah Muhammad: Born in 1897 as Elijah Poole, the son of a Georgia sharecropper, he assumed leadership of the Black Muslims on Fard's death and began preaching that a race of "white devils" had been created from blacks who were the original inhabitants of the Earth. He demanded a piece of the United States for a separate black nation and taught that Allah would destroy white civilization by the end of this century. He died in 1975.

Malcolm X

• Malcolm X: Elijah Muhammad's chief spokesman until he left the movement in 1964 and started his own. He was murdered less than a year later. Two Black Muslims and another man believed to be a Muslim were convicted of the crime.

• Wallace Muhammad: Elijah's son, he took over the organization following his father's death and began to abandon many of its doctrines. Wallace, now 43, opened membership in the group to all races, saying "We know there is no superiority in any color," and abolished its karate-trained police force, called the "Fruit of Islam."

● Muhammad Ali: known as Cassius Clay as an Olympic boxing star, he won the world heavyweight boxing championship in 1964, the same year he joined the Nation of Islam and changed his name. Ali's manager is Herbert Muhammad, one of Elijah's sons.

● Kareem Abdul-Jabbar: Known as Lew Alcindor when he joined UCLA's basketball team, he lead the Bruins to national championships in 1967, 1968 and 1969. He became a Moslem and changed his name. The 7-foot-2 star plays for the Los Angeles Lakers in the National Basketball Association.

The Hanafi Moslems and Black Muslims are antagonists.

In January 1973, seven Hanafi Moslems, including three of Khaalis's children, were slain in their Washington headquarters. (The children were grandchildren of Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins, whose daughter, Bibi, also was shot.)

Khaalīs: This Is My Faith, This Is War

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hamaas Abdul Khaalīs, leader of the terrorists who invaded three buildings and held some 100 hostages, repeated Thursday his willingness to die.

Khaalīs also threatened terrorism may spread to other cities because his faith permits the killing of other people when its followers are involved in what he called a war.

Here are excerpts from comments Khaalīs made during a telephone interview on a Washington television program:

Q. Have there been any indications that your demands that the Black Muslims be delivered to the B'nai B'rith center...?

A. That's the government's problem, isn't it?

Q. Beg your pardon...?

A. That's the government's problem, isn't it?

Q. Have you given them any deadlines?

A. I say that's the government's problem. If they play around then everybody will be arguing about who did what afterwards, right? And who didn't do what they were supposed to do, right? Graver things go down.

Q. Do you feel that...?

A. Then there'll be a lot more people crying the blues.

Q. Do you feel that you are not being negotiated with in good faith at this time?

A. It'd better not be. There's gonna be a lot of bad trouble. That's their problem, not mine. If they want to play games and think that they got to go by some blueprint or some psychologist or some psychiatrist foolishness, that's their problem, not mine. This is my faith. I'm not involved in that foolishness.

Q. If you would prefer...?

A. We are up here fighting and prepared to die for our faith and more men and women could come behind me and do an even more graver thing which is already been, you know, not here, there, other places in this country. This is a big country.

Q. Are you suggesting that what is happening in the District (of Columbia) is just a part of what could happen in other places?

A. Here in the District is nice because when you find out that you killed me and wipe us out and a lot of these people up here are killed then it's going to be worse next time. Worse. You can't even imagine.

Q. Do you feel satisfied at this point that your position...?

A. I'm not satisfied. I'm a Muslim believer by conviction and faith, so satisfied as nothing to do with it. I'm a Muslim by conviction and faith.

Q. You have said that your faith allows you or even tells you to fight to the death.

A. That's right. Qisas. It's called Qital or Qisas, that's right, Allah permits the Muslim who has been aggressed against, whose children are killed, where capital crimes are committed against them like they slaughter our family. That's right, we are permitted to retribution. That's right, Allah orders that Allah orders it in the Koran.

Q. Does that retribution allow for the killing of other people who are not involved in the struggle?

A. That retribution is allowed when you are fighting in war. We're at war. That's the same thing, you know. In every war that this country has fought in in every country around the world more innocent civilians are harmed and killed than soldiers. For example, Vietnam, Korea, Europe....

Q. If you are at war who are the enemies, Mr....?

A. Enemy? That's a very, very good question. The enemy are those who stand in the doorway of Islam to stymie it. That's who the enemy is.

Police Now Taught To Wait Out Hostage Holders

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With lessons from psychology, most big-city police departments have developed ways to deal with terrorists holding hostages.

Mostly, they wait.

"Patience is the answer, that is the basic ingredient," says Patrick Murphy, president of the Police Foundation and former police commissioner of New York City.

"The more time that goes by, the better the chance for a successful solution," says Richard Kobetz, an assistant director of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

Kobetz says most metropolitan police forces have officers trained to deal with hostage operations. Some have added psychologists to provide advice on terrorists' mental state.

But many smaller police departments have had little if any training in the field, partly because of money shortages and personnel cutbacks, he says.

In Charlotte, several police officers have been trained in the use of special weapons and tactics for situations where hostages are involved. Officials could not say if Charlotte officers have specific advance instructions for dealing with such situations.

Terrorism in the United States is a phenomenon of the 1970s and police are still searching for the best ways of handling it, Kobetz says.

Yet some basic procedures have proven successful and are being repeated.

The first rule appears to be negotiation.

"If they are not absolutely endangering the lives of the hostages by direct assault, the issue is to negotiate," Kobetz says.

Murphy, head of the nonprofit foundation which promotes research on law enforcement problems, says police are being won over to the notion of talking instead of shooting.

"They're much more ready to use the patient, restrained, wait-them-out approach and it has been successful," Murphy says. "I wouldn't pretend that all the officers down through the ranks have been converted. In the locker room, you'll probably still hear things like, 'They should have rushed them.' But their commanders have changed and they are able to control the officers."

Some law enforcement officers and politicians resist the idea of giving in to the demands of criminals.

But Murphy says, "The protection of the lives of the hostages is paramount. The protection of an innocent life is considered more important than the escape of a gunman."

In the case of an impossible demand — such as the release of convicted killers, as the Hanafi Moslems in Washington are making — negotiators must stall, Murphy says.

They must avoid saying yes or no and try to get the gunmen to scale down their demands.

In general, "the gunmen's attitudes change as time passes. They're charged up at first but as they sit through hours and hours, they wear down."

Once the terrorist begins talking to police, negotiators pick up clues about his motives, his state of mind, what actions are likely to anger him, what might satisfy him, Kobetz says.

"People have to scurry about and find out who he is and what his background is. Is he agitated? Does he really mean to follow through with his threats?"

Gunmen 'Expressing Hurt'Time Saved Hostages*By CATHY STEELE ROCHE
News Staff Writer

Dr. Reginald Hawkins, minister and father-in-law of the Hanafi Moslem who led a 38-hour terrorist siege in Washington, says his prayers were answered when the gunmen released their 134 hostages and gave up peacefully this morning.

"That was my prayer, that the matter would be resolved in this fashion. I felt that if cool heads prevailed that time would be on the side of making sure there would be no more bloodshed," Hawkins said this morning from his Charlotte home.

"This was a religious situation. It was an outcry trying to express a hurt. This was the only way they felt they could get attention to express that hurt."

The actions of the 12 terrorists personally touched Hawkins, a Charlotte dentist and former candidate for governor of North Carolina.

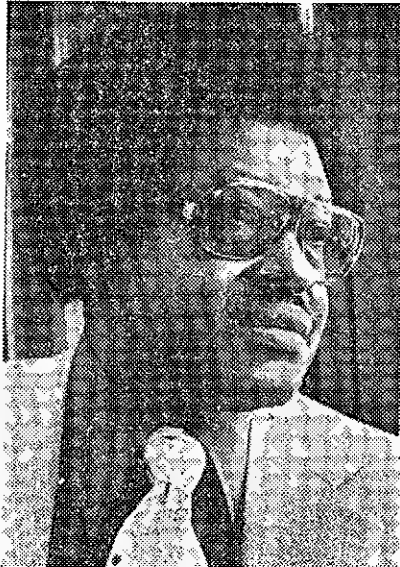

The Hanafi Moslem gunmen sought retribution against members of the rival Black Muslim sect, responsible for the killing of seven Hanafi Moslems at their Washington headquarters in 1973.

Three of the dead were Hawkins' small grandchildren. His daughter, the former Paulette Hawkins, now Bibi Khaalis, was shot in the head during the attack and remains partially paralyzed.

Hawkins' son-in-law, Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, wanted revenge for the killing of his children and demanded that those convicted in the deaths be turned over to him.

"I will certainly do all I can to try to get it understood that we can't undo what has already been done and that we have to trust in God and ourselves," Hawkins said this morning. "We have to live for those who have died. And we can't in the area of an eye-for-an-eye and a tooth-for-a-tooth; extract the kind of justice for the hurt we feel."

He said he was in contact with Khaalis during the siege and thinks his conversations with the gunmen helped bring the incident to a peaceful end.

DR. REGINALD HAWKINS*... Release answered prayer

Hawkins praised Washington police and the three ambassadors from Moslem nations who negotiated with the terrorists, reading to them from the Koran, a book that corresponds to the Christian Bible.

"I think the whole scenario was played correctly, on the part of the policemen and on the part of the ambassadors who have a Moslem sensitivity; who understood the hurt and could express the hurt keenly," Hawkins said.

"In negotiations with people who have religious hurts, all you need is time and prayer and understanding."

He said, "I disagreed with all of them. I'm a Christian minister, and they're Moslems. But the world has got to learn to respect all religions."

When End Came, The Tears Began

WASHINGTON — The end came in the middle of the night, while this sleepless city was continuing its anxious wait for something to break in the three buildings where religious fanatics held 134 hostages. Suddenly, it happened:

The terrorists surrendered; the hostages were free. After 38 hours on a razor's edge, the nightmare in this tense city had ended.

Near the B'nai B'rith building, hostages' relatives embraced and danced in the streets.

The hostages were hustled out a back door, into a hotel and then bused to a hospital, to be reunited with relatives.

"I used to hate cops. But you have a wonderful police department," one woman yelled in her newfound freedom.

"Here I am, Mom," Gordon Zaritsky shouted across a police barrier at the hospital. Finding his mother, he embraced her, saying, "I was fine, I was just fine."

Many family members cried. Doctors said most of the freed hostages appeared in good condition. Many walked off their buses to find their relatives, but a few leaned heavily on doctors as they walked toward the hospital.

"Those of your family, your loved ones and friends are going to be free to go home tonight. Those of you who are here to see your loved ones are going to see them," relatives heard.

"Please bear with us. These people went through hell."

Inside a hospital room, one man writhed in pain on a table. Another had a large gash over his left eye.

Doctors examined all hostages, screening them for chronic illnesses. During the siege, the terrorists released four men with chest pains. But one woman wearing a leg cast was kept to the end.

The freed hostages munched on fried chicken and sipped coffee as they waited their turn with the doctors.

Most complied with instructions from authorities not to speak with reporters.

"I'm fine," was all a man wearing a blood-stained shirt would say. "It's not mine," he said pointing to the blood.

Bells at Foundry Methodist Church rang through the early morning darkness as other buses brought some of the freed hostages from the hospital to meet relatives waiting at the church.

Describing the sensation when a special police force entered the B'nai B'rith building, one of those under siege, Sidney Closter, a freed captive, said:

"They came in, and we were all lying down tied up. Everybody was lying down and they told us to be quiet."

"The voice was different," Closter said. "We knew they were no longer the Moslems ... Afterwards, we congratulated each other and, as Jews, we all said a traditional prayer."

At the District of Columbia city hall, where the only death occurred, word of freedom came by telephone.

Two gunmen received a call about 11 a.m. EST, said Alan Winter, one of eight hostages held there.

"The women asked if that meant we were going to be released. And they (the gunmen) said yes," Winter said.

Winter said the gunmen noted news reports of the fear they inspired in the nation's capital, but never mentioned a 24-year-old radio reporter killed in the takeover.

Terrorist Leader Free Too See You Later, He Says End To Ordeal Comes After Deal Is Made

WASHINGTON — A head of 120 Hanafi Moslem gunmen surrendered early today ending their 38-hour reign of terror in the nation's capital. The terrorist leader then walked free without bail — the result of the deal that ended it all.

Under the agreement that freed 134 hostages without further harm, Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis was released after being charged with armed kidnapping.

Before the terrorists surrendered, the leader threatened repeatedly to chop off the heads of his hostages if his demands for revenge against Black Muslim leaders were not met.

Brought to court before dawn, arraigned and speedily set free, Abdul Khaalis reached his home in north-west Washington at about the same time many of his captives reached their.

"See you later," he said as he was escorted up the walk toward the stone house with barred windows. Two men carrying long curved swords stood guard in the front yard.

The other 11 were jailed awaiting arraignments later today. Police, meanwhile, scoured the three buildings involved in the siege for evidence. Otherwise, the city and its disrupted traffic returned to normal.

The gunmen freed their hostages after a three-hour negotiating session with police officials and ambassadors from three Islamic nations who read them poetry and passages from the Koran, the Moslem holy book.

The Egyptian ambassador, Ashrat Ghorbal, said he and his diplomatic colleagues set the stage for surrender by reading from the Koran "songs of compassion, forgiveness, understanding, the things our Lord orders us to do."

The Egyptian ambassador said Abdul Khaalis told him "the quotations provided a real element of trust and confidence. He wanted somebody with whom he could develop a dialogue."

Iranian Ambassador Ardeshir Zehedi said he had suggested early on, "Why don't we have a face-to-face talk." He said Abdul Khaalis and authorities were at first against the idea — "Everyone called me mad or crazy."

Abdul Khaalis sought revenge for the 1973 murders of seven people in his house, six of them his children. Four Black Muslims were convicted of the crime; Abdul Khaalis said Black Muslim leaders were responsible.

Superior Court Chief Judge Harold Greene, in ordering Abdul Khaalis freed on his own recognizance, said:

"The court is mindful of the events in this city of the last three days. Nevertheless, the safety and release of the hostages depended on the release of the defendant."

The judge said he was following the recommendation of U.S. Atty.

Earl Silbert in releasing Abdul Khaalis.

Greene set the following conditions for Abdul Khaalis' release: He may not keep or possess firearms; he must remain in Washington and he is barred from discussing the case before trial.

The judge asked the terrorist leader if he understood the conditions of his release.

"Yes, I do," Abdul Khaalis replied in a barely audible voice. In court, the terrorist's meek demeanor contrasted sharply with the fear he had generated while holding hostages and issuing threats in a deep, booming voice.

The heavily armed terrorists struck at midday Wednesday and occupied three buildings, including city hall.

The hostages, captives for up to 38 hours, were examined at George Washington University Hospital, where a doctor said none required admittance. Most were quickly reunited with relatives.

One young woman held hostage in the B'nai B'rith building where Abdul Khaalis made his headquarters told how she and other captives were ordered to lie in neat rows on their stomachs and touch the toes of the person in front.

"I thought we were gonna be executed," said the woman, who asked not to be identified. "Waiting was agony."

As their ordeal dragged on, she said their captors grew more sympathetic.

"They were not kind," she said. "But they were sympathetic to everyone's needs."

"They threatened to throw someone out a window, but they never did. They threatened to chop a head off, but they never did."

Saugia Bayoumi, a young Moslem woman held captive at the Islamic Center said, "I thank Allah that everything went all right. We were praying all the time for all those people who were taken hostage to be freed. They didn't talk much. I was well treated but they didn't tell us why they did it."

Bernard Simon, spokesman for B'nai B'rith, said that at one point, one man was picked out from the hostages, bound hand and foot, and was told he would be the first to be beheaded. He said the man was not harmed.

"They alternately threatened us and were kind to us," he said.

The terrorist episode began Wednesday with bloodshed — a black radio newsmen was shot to death and several people were pistol-whipped or wounded. It continued through yesterday with the lives of the captives poised precariously before the drawn guns and swords of the Hanafi Moslems.

It ended at 1:45 a.m. with the hostages in joyful reunion with their families. Bells rang out at Foundry Methodist Church where worried families waited.

"I didn't give up anything. What I got was 134 citizens alive," said Mayor Walter Washington, who announced the dramatic end to the confrontation at a downtown command post.

Relatives

Embrace... And Wait

Observer Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Time is on our side, the families keep saying. Really it is.

And the gunmen don't want to hurt anybody. They really don't. So have some faith and another cigarette. And wait.

"That's all we can do, wait, and hold onto each other," said a girl who waited in a church basement for word on her sister — a secretary taken hostage at B'nai B'rith headquarters.

She put her arm around her mother. "We're all sort of collecting scraps of good news to hang onto," she said dejectedly.

It was the same for everyone waiting for word of friends and relatives being held by the Hanafi gunmen. Knitting, reading, playing cards, they built a fragile framework of hope.

They reminded each other the gunmen did release some hostages who were sick or injured.

Police set up a phone number — (202) 347-9550, Ext. 802, 804, 810 or 811 — for people to call to learn if a relative is among the hostages.

At the Islamic Center, one of three hostage sites, Cecilia Von Goetz, 54, was released after she experienced chest pains.

Congressman Robert Dornan, R-Calif., volunteered to trade places with some hostages, but it appeared unlikely police would agree to that.

Andrew Hoffman, one hostage released by the Moslems, said their leader went into a rage at times and fired shots into a telephone at mention of the film "Mohammad, Messenger of God."

Hoffman said the shooting occurred while Hamas leader Khaalil was being interviewed by WRC-TV.

On Khaalil's demand, the movie was halted Wednesday at theaters in New York and Los Angeles. Its distributor said it was being withdrawn.

Khaalil said the movie — depicting the rise of the prophet of Islam — ridiculed his religion.

(The movie was originally scheduled for release in the Carolinas in late April. "Now, though, everything is up in the air," said Dave Ornstein, sales manager for distributor Irwin Yablans in California.)

"They had everybody lie down on the floor and touch the feet of the people in front of you. They tied the hands of everybody with ties and telephone wires," Hoffman said.

"The leader let me go. He asked me where my people came from and I told him Italy. He asked me if I was married. I told him 'No.' After he let me go, he yelled down the stairs to me, 'Andy, get married and have a lot of babies.'"

2-Day Siege Finally Over

D.C. Hostages Freed By Captors

Observer Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — The Hanafi Moslem gunmen who struck terror into the nation's capital by seizing three buildings and some 130 hostages released their captives early today and were immediately arrested.

There were no casualties and all the terrorists were taken into custody. Their leader, Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, was taken first.

Mayor Walter Washington announced the agreement.

The accord was reached with the assistance of ambassadors from three Islamic nations, including Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and Ayatollah Abolmouzaq Ali Khamenei, and of the predominantly black Hanafi sect.

Moments after the settlement was announced, a squad car escorted two buses into cordoned areas near both the B'nai B'rith and the city hall, where captives were taken on Wednesday.

Details of the agreement were not disclosed.

In addition to Zahedi, others at the negotiating session included Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf A. Ghorbal and Pakistan's Yaghoub Khan.

The negotiators left the building late Thursday, three hours after entering it. There was no indication of how the talks went.

Peter Flaherty, President Carter's nominee to be deputy attorney general, also was seen entering the area, which was sealed off by police.

The ambassadors and the others met terrorists around a table in full view of the street, but then moved their gathering out of sight.

President Carter said he had been keeping close tabs on the situation.

"It is obviously deplorable that a deep religious belief would lead to violence," Carter told reporters.

"I'm concerned about it, but I think it is in good hands."

So the hostages entered their second night in captivity, held by gunmen who demanded the government deliver the men they blamed for the 1973 murder of seven members of their sect in Washington.

"We are committed to retribution. Our law allows that," said Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, leader of the terrorists and of the predominantly black Hanafi sect.

"There is no justice without the sword," he said.

The hostages were seized Wednesday in terrorist invasions of B'nai B'rith, a Jewish organization; a Moslem religious center, and the District of Columbia's city hall.

One man was killed and 11 people were injured in those raids.

Khaalis was in command of at least four gunmen at the B'nai B'rith site.

One man, against whom they sought revenge, Wallace Muhammad, leader of the rival Black Muslim sect, came to Washington, but a city official said he could be no help.

So he waited, too, in suburban Arlington, Va., under police protection. City Council President Sterling Tucker said negotiations were sensitive and any role for Wallace Muhammad would throw them off balance.

"What is necessary is patience," Tucker said. "Things are calm and the hostages are apparently being well cared for."

Mayor Walter Washington said there was reason for optimism. "The hostages in there have been very well treated," he said. "We're being very careful and very cautious."

At the District of Columbia Building (city hall) near the White House, 2 gunmen were holding 9 hostages. The seven men among them were bound hand and foot.

At the Islamic Center, a mosque on Embassy Row, there were three gunmen and nine or ten hostages, some of whom were bound.

A truckload of mattresses pulled up to a side door and police said the gunmen wanted them.

Food, medicine and, in at least one instance, cigarettes were sent earlier in the day to the captives.

The terrorists threatened to chop off the heads of their hostages unless government officials met demands for vengeance.

During the day, however, the gunmen released three hostages who complained of chest pains.

Meanwhile, the police have tried to sit tight.

"Our policy is, 'Let's not force anything,'" said police spokesman Gary Hankins. "We have all the time in the world. We found in the past we have more success if we just sit it out. It's not as dramatic as gunfire and busting-in windows, but it works better."

The small Hanafi sect and the much larger Black Muslim sect have been feuding for years. Seven Hanafis, five of them children, were murdered in Washington in 1973. Four Black Muslims from Philadelphia were convicted of the murders. Another awaits retrial.

(Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, leader of the terrorists, is married to the daughter of Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins. She was shot in the 1973 incident, and three of her and Khaalis's children were among those killed.)

The terrorists demanded the delivery of leaders of the Black Muslims, among them Wallace Muhammad, his brother Herbert and heavy-weight boxing champion Muhammad Ali. Herbert Muhammad is Ali's manager.

Ali told ABC News he didn't want to become involved. He said no one had asked him to come to Washington. Ali, in Los Angeles, said he would talk only with President Carter.

"If you're concerned about me, don't get me involved," he said.

Hostage Alan Grip, allowed to telephone a message Thursday morning, told reporters:

"We're being treated very well.... They've allowed us to have our hands tied in front of us instead of in back, which is a lot more comfortable. We're allowed to have coffee or tea. We're being treated very well."

At the B'nai B'rith building, where Khaalis and 3-5 companions held more than 100 hostages — coffee and doughnuts were delivered in the morning, and groceries were sent up to the eighth floor in the afternoon.

At the Islamic Center, gunmen sent out a shopping list, including two dozen eggs, three loaves of whole wheat bread, apples and bananas.

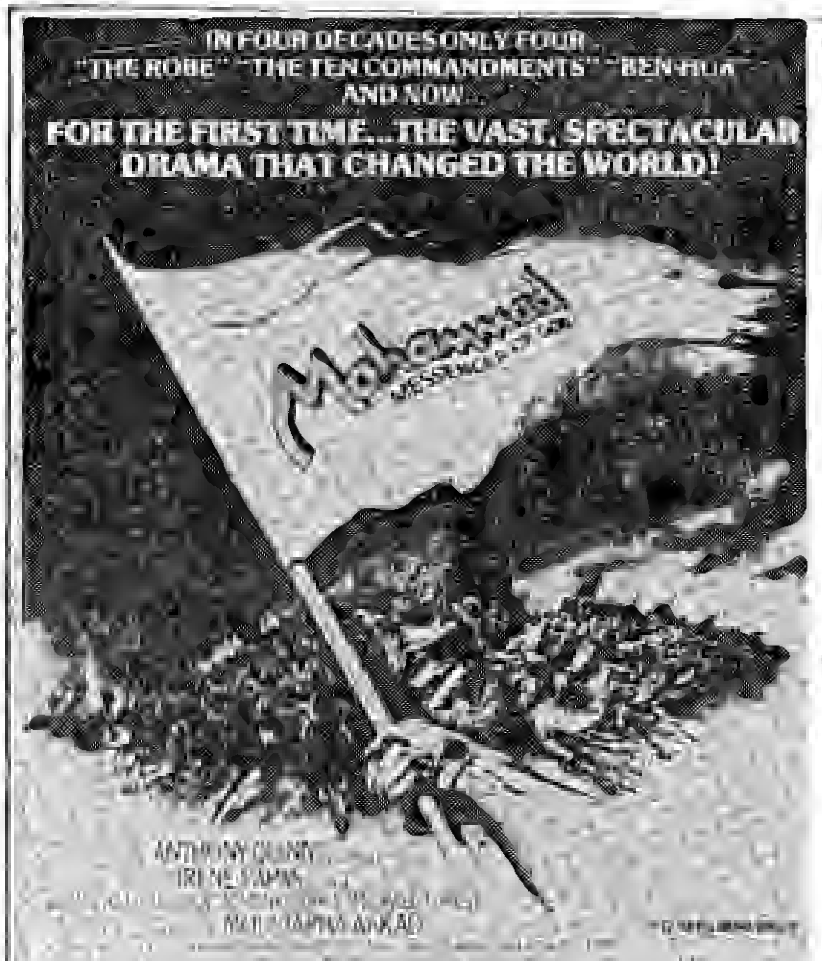

An undetermined number of city workers remained barricaded in fifth floor city hall offices, too close to the terrorists to attempt escape.

The intruders were armed with rifles, shotguns, automatic weapons, knives and swords.

3 Envoys: A Pooling Of Talents

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Here are profiles of the three ambassadors who helped end the 38-hour ordeal in the nation's capital.

Ardeshir Zahedi: A 48-year-old bachelor, Zahedi is one of the fore- most partygivers and partygoers in the Washington diplomatic corps. His name has been linked at times with many beautiful women, includ- ing actress Elizabeth Taylor.

He once was married to Shahnaz Pahlavi, sister of the shah of Iran, but the marriage was dissolved in 1964. They had one daughter.

In 1954 Zahedi was named cham- berman to the shah. He has been am- bassador to Mexico and Great Brit- ain, as well as the United States, and also served as Iran's foreign minis- ter.

Ashraf A. Ghorbal: Known as one of the wittiest men in the diplomatic corps, the 51-year-old Ghorbal is a native of the Nile delta and was edu- cated at the University of Cairo and at Harvard.

He has been a member of the Egyptian diplomatic corps since 1945, holding posts at the United Na- tions and in Geneva, Paris, London, Ottawa and Cairo.

Ghorbal's daughter is a graduate of Georgetown University, and his son attends Catholic University, both Washington schools.

Sahabzada Yaqub-Khan: A retired lieutenant-general of the Pakistani army, the 56-year-old Yaqub-Khan is an intellectual who migrated to Pakistan from his birthplace in Ram- pur, India.

He received his initial army com- mission in 1940, and spent the next 31 years in the military. During WWII he served in the Mideast.

He entered the diplomatic service in 1972 as ambassador to France. The next year he was named am- bassador to the United States. He is married and has two children.

Hostages Bruised But Alive

Observer Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — "I was waiting my turn to go to the men's room and all of a sudden the two terrorists on guard faded away. I heard a noise and then there was a beautiful sight — the Metropolitan police."

Bernard Simon, public relations director for B'nai B'rith, described the end of his 38-hour ordeal that way.

Ashen, shaken, many bloodied and bruised, but elated at finding themselves alive, 134 men and women held at three Washington locations emerged before dawn Friday to tell of terror and pathos.

"Old men" like Simon, 56, were told they would be decapitated by the Hanafi Moslems, who wielded machetes and automatic weapons.

Some men were pistol-whipped and kicked without apparent provocation.

But women were treated with considerable courtesy, left untied and even told to cover their legs with newspapers to preserve Moslem decorum.

Still, Mimi Feldman, a secretary, discreetly removed her Star of David lest she offend her captors, who repeatedly uttered anti-Semitic epithets like "Jew bastards."

Finally, though, the episode ended tenderly and joyfully, with Mayor Walter Washington yelling, "Those of you who have not been with your families for many hours, go home and enjoy, enjoy."

Those who had kept vigil outside the buildings imprisoning their loved ones rushed to greet emerging hostages.

"Here I am, Mom," cried Gordon Zaritsky as he sprinted for his mother and embraced her.

"Good to see you, Babe," sobbed Nathan Habershtock of Arlington, Va., when his young daughter emerged from George Washington Hospital, where all hostages were bused after their release.

One B'nai B'rith employe, who asked that her name not be used, described Wednesday's harrowing invasion.

First, she said, employes heard the sound of rifle fire exploding through the corridors. Two women and a man locked their door and tried to hide.

But three bullets blew apart the lock and terrorists entered the room.

"They took us up to the conference room," she said, "and they told us all to lie down in neat rows on the floor, face down, touching each other's toes. At that point, I thought we were going to be executed."

"That was agony — the waiting," she said.

But instead of shooting, the captors painted the windows so no one could see inside. "They didn't tell us anything until the leader appeared."

The leader, Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, told us about how his wife and children had been killed and how he wanted justice and he didn't care how he did it. He said he didn't care if we were Jewish or not. He said black, white, green or purple, we were going to pay."

Releasing

Khaal's Prompts

Disbelief, Support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government negotiators turned down a request by Hanafi Moslem terrorists Hamaas Abdul Khaalis for immunity from prosecution.

But, the Los Angeles Times reported, they agreed to release him temporarily on the theory "he had to be given something."

What they gave him proved controversial. Releasing Khaalis "stinks," said a Chicago bartender. "I can't believe it," said Rich Howson, a Seattle salesman. "They have absolutely opened the door for more episodes like this."

And Police Chief Bruce Bailey of Montgomery Township, Pa., contended, "You have to promise anything to get the hostages out, but then you bounce them in the slammer real quick."

But Earl Silbert, the U.S. attorney in the District of Columbia, said that agreeing to release Khaalis was "only to save human life."

Silbert said the government was motivated by the fact that one person was killed and by statements (by terrorists) that heads will roll and the continuous statements that "blood will be ankle-deep."

"The important thing was to save the hostages' lives," another official said. "If the government had held out, and people were killed, what would critics be saying now?"

The agreement, approved in the wee hours Friday by Attorney General Griffin Bell and accepted by Superior Court Judge Harold Greene, attached five conditions to releasing

They were that he wouldn't travel outside the District of Columbia; would surrender his American passport; not possess firearms; refrain from pretrial public comment; and not engage in any further criminal acts.

Greene, saying he was "mindful of the events of the last two days," said he wouldn't normally release such a defendant without bonds.

But the court is not in a position to second-guess the law enforcement authorities, Greene said.

Several government officials declined Friday to comment on whether Khaalis would be kept under surveillance.

After his release, he returned to the large, brick-and-stone home he occupies in northwest Washington with his family, and several followers.

(Khaalis is the son-in-law of Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins.)

Friday, two men with curved swords guarded the residence.

12 Charged With Armed Kidnaping

Terrorist Free, Hostages Safe

Observer Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Four Hanafi Moslem terrorists were freed without bail and eight others were jailed Friday after they were charged with armed kidnaping.

Their 38-hour siege ended dramatically early Friday with the safe release of 134 hostages.

Church bells pealed and horns blared a chorus of relief at the release.

"I feel as if I'm born again," hostage Gayuzia Bayumi declared.

Prosecutors said they would seek to indict all 12 terrorists for murder in the death of Maurice Williams, a black radio station reporter killed by gunfire in the takeover of the District of Columbia city hall.

It was one of three sites occupied Wednesday by the gunmen.

First to be set free was Hanafi leader Hamaas. Abdul Khaalis, 54, who had threatened repeatedly to chop off the heads of his hostages.

Prosecutors promised him freedom pending trial in return for their release.

The three-hour, late-night negotiations were handled by three Islamic ambassadors who quoted to Khaalis from the Koran, the Moslem holy book.

Ironically, the three Moslem statesmen did their negotiating in the lobby of the B'nai B'rith headquarters, bargaining for the lives of more than 100 Jews among the hostages.

Also set free Friday were three Hanafis who had seized the Islamic Center mosque without firing a shot and without injuring any hostages.

Superior Court Judge Carl Moultrie said the District of Columbia's liberal bail law left him no choice but to release them because their charges might be lighter than the rest.

The law requires release without bail if defendants have community ties and are not a threat or liable to flee the court's reach.

"The judges don't make the laws," Moultrie said. "We only carry them out."

Bail was set at $50,000 each for two who took over the District Building where Williams was killed and three others wounded.

Of those who helped Khaalis seize the headquarters of the Jewish service organization B'nai B'rith, where several persons were wounded, four had bail set at $50,000 and two at $75,000.

Khalis After Release

... he's at doorway of his home

Prosecutors said all 12 defendants could draw prison terms of 150 years or life if indicted and convicted on murder charges.

U.S. Attorney Earl Silbert said he granted pretrial freedom to Khalis only as part of the bargain "to save a human life."

He asked that the others be jailed with high bail because they "inflicted a reign of terror not only on these people (the hostages) but on this city, the nation's capital."

In other developments:

• Six of the gunman's victims remained hospitalized, two in serious condition. City Councilman Marlon Barry, recovering from a chest wound inflicted in the takeover of city hall, was released.

• The funeral was scheduled for Monday, for Williams. His employer, radio station WHUR-FM, announced it would sponsor a scholarship fund at Howard University in his memory.

• Black Muslim leader Wallace Muhammad said in Chicago he feared for his life because Khalis is free. Muhammad is among those Khalis blames for the brutal slaying of his children four years ago.

Muhammad has denied responsibility for the slayings but said Friday he would not have stopped them if he had been given the chance, because Khalis had threatened the late Muslim leader, Elijah Muhammad, Wallace's father.

• The film "Mohammad, Messenger of God," was scheduled to receive some public exhibitions today. Screenings were halted in the middle of its American premiere Wednesday because the terrorists demanded its cancellation on grounds it is offensive to strict Moslems.

Early Friday, church bells rang in celebration when the remaining hostages were freed. All were examined at a hospital and sent home, some after treatment for minor injuries.

President Carter praised Washington city officials for their "slow and careful approach."

The president also said he sent personal letters of thanks to the ambassadors of Iran, Egypt and Pakistan for talking the Hanafi leader into surrendering.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance called the three ambassadors "humanitarians and diplomats in the highest sense."

Washington Security: Never A Sure Thing?

By WILLIAM J. EATON
Observer Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Government officials, after the city's first taste of terrorism this week, are reviewing plans for protecting federal buildings and their VIP occupants.

More than a half-dozen police forces are responsible for guarding such imposing structures as the White House, the Pentagon and the Capitol.

Most of the security officers believe screening of visitors can go only so far without a strong citizen backlash.

"It's a problem that is very difficult to deal with," said one federal official. "The American people are not going to submit to searches to get into a government building so that if someone really wants to sneak in with a weapon it probably can be done."

The 1,750 members of the Federal Protective Service who guard federal buildings, have developed mobile teams. They also have stepped up the use of electronic alarm systems to detect intruders on nights and weekends.

At the Capitol, a force of 1,120 officers is employed. Long before the Hanafi incident, people entering the visitors' galleries had to march through a metal detector.

The Supreme Court, which has its own 70-member police force, also uses a metal detector to screen visitors.

Tight security rules are in effect at the State Department, where visitors must have an escort, and the Pentagon, where visitors are logged at the door.

The Executive Protective Service, 900 strong, is assigned to guard foreign embassies.

The U.S. Park Police, with 650 officers, protects the Washington Monument, the Lincoln Memorial, the Kennedy Center and other famous landmarks.

The Hanafi raids, in a sense, were a tribute to the existing federal security forces. The gunmen picked their targets carefully.

The only government structure raided — the city hall or District building — was guarded by only a handful of men. A Hanafi Moslem openly wielding a shotgun made it to the fifth floor without being stopped and then it was too late to forestall the capture of hostages.

The B'nai B'rith headquarters was security-conscious because of past harassment from neo-Nazi groups. But it had only a single security guard on the first floor and he was overwhelmed by the invading gunmen.

The Islamic center, the third building seized, was not covered by the Executive Protective Service.

D.C. Siege: Holy War, Terrorism

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Taxi drivers turned terrorists, city hall was bloodied and seized. In a house of Allah, home of peace, invaders threaten mass-murder: "Heads will roll and people will die unless we get our demands."

The siege of Washington.

It is a story of intrigue among black Moslems; of holy causes; of one man's anguish festering, infecting his brothers, exploding.

It is a story familiar in the centuries of man — violence in the name of religion.

The Moslems call it Jihad, defined as "a holy war undertaken as a sacred duty; a vigorous, often bitter crusade for an idea and a principle."

For their personal Jihad — a tense and violent mass-kidnaping and occupation at three Washington buildings — 12 Hanafi Moslems face the retribution of D.C. Superior Court.

Four of the terrorists, including their leader, Hanafi minister Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, are free, released without bail. Khaalis was promised his freedom for the release of the hostages. Eight others are held on bond ranging from $50,000 to $75,000.

The gunmen have been charged with armed kidnaping and authorities are seeking felony murder indictments. The two-day toll from the Hanafi siege is one dead, a dozen or so wounded or beaten and 134 persons held as hostages for up to 38 hours.

The terrorists were a band of intense, black and mostly young Americans — men who dropped familiar names like McGhee and Young to embrace Islamic names reflecting their new-found faith.

Most are cabbies by trade; most are unseemly terrorists.

The Hanafi 12, ranging from 22 to 54 years old, lived quiet lives in middle-class neighborhoods of Washington and suburban Maryland. Neighbors say the Hanafis have always been pleasant and polite.

Hamaas Abdul Khaalis was born Ernest Timothy McGhee 54 years ago in Gary, Ind. His family was Catholic.

In 1946 he was converted to the Moslem faith by a Pakistani teacher and sent on a mission of conversion himself — to Elijah Muhammad, whose Chicago-based Black Muslim movement was becoming influential in the black community.

Khaalis sought to convert Elijah Muhammad to a more orthodox form of Islam.

Black Muslims, known as the World Community of Islam in the West, are black American Moslems who originally differed from the orthodox by refusing to accept whites as members. After Khaalis joined the Black Muslims, the racial restriction became a chief point of dispute between him and Elijah Muhammad.

After Elijah Muhammad's death in 1975, the racial restriction was lifted.

What one Moslem scholar calls the "religious underpinnings" of last week's siege, probably trace to 1958, when Khaalis gave up his attempts to convert Black Muslims.

In 1972, Khaalis wrote a strong denunciation of Elijah Muhammad and sent it to Black Muslim ministers. On Jan. 18, 1973 a squad of gunmen stormed the Hanafi center and killed seven persons, including six sons and daughters of Khaalis.

(Khaalis is the son-in-law of Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins.)

Khaalis's letter apparently enraged the Philadelphia Black Muslims convicted of the murders. Four men are serving jail sentences of at least 140 years each for the attack.

But Khaalis felt that didn't satisfy Moslem justice, "blood for blood."

He also charged the 1973 murders resulted from a conspiracy involving other prominent Black Muslims — the current leader Wallace Muhammad, his brother Herbert and heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali.

The siege, a volatile mixture of violence and religion, began late Wednesday morning, just hours before the American premiere of an $18-million film, "Mohammad, Messenger of God."

Then the demands, more religion and more violence in its name:

• Stop the movie, ordered Khaalis. It was sacrilege, he said.

In New York, a projectionist shut down the film in midreel. "No movie is worth people's lives," said the movie's distributor.

Some orthodox Moslems interpret the Koran as outlawing any attempt to portray an image of the prophet. The film depicts Muhammad's life, though the prophet himself is not characterized by an actor.

• Return my $750, demanded the Hanafi leader.

That was the fine levied by a judge during the 1973 murder trial when, with jurors present, Khaalis shouted at the defendants: "You killed my babies. You killed my babies and shot my women."

Police delivered the money to Khaalis at the B'nai B'rith.

• Bring me the murderers, said Khaalis. And bring me, too, Wallace Muhammad and Muhammad Ali. He wanted retribution.

Blood for blood was one demand the police would not meet. Negotiations began.

Finally, the deal was struck.

Khaalis was taken into custody, without incident, along with his 11 followers. The hostages were released. Court proceedings began. And Saturday, in New York, "Mohammad, Messenger of God" had its delayed debut.

The siege of Washington ended.

Making A Deal With Terror

The terrorist leader strolled away from the scene he had created. "See you later," he said casually as he walked into his home, leaving a dead man behind him. It was part of the deal made to assure the lives of 134 hostages. The deal worked.

Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, who sought to avenge family deaths of three years ago, would post no bond after being charged with armed kidnapping. He would go home to await trial. Special treatment; and it angered many Americans, though the District of Columbia's bail code permits it.

"How can we let a guy like that call the shots?" wondered a man who called this newspaper. "What's it coming to?" Charlotte law enforcement people worried about a precedent being established. Most of all, the deal seems to violate peoples' notions of the even-handed rule of law. It disturbs us, and we have no answers; just some thoughts.

The deal a U. S. judge agreed to is to free Khaalis without bail on condition he not leave the district, surrender his passport and possess no firearms. In short, go home and keep your nose clean until trial. The deal did not put Khaalis on an airplane bound for Iraq with a suitcase stuffed with money.

In similar circumstances, how far would most people go to save the lives of over a hundred other people? Probably pretty far. That life is paramount is the foundation of everything we call ethics. But there are consequences of going far to save lives in the electronic theater that is our world. Those involved in the decision must now wait to see if, as many fear, the future holds scores of similar scenes.

They made a choice from among a number of difficult options, the most ghastly of which would have been the televised extravaganza of a combat assault in the style of the fiery California extinction of the Symbionese Liberation Army.

We may in time have more lives to worry about than those being held in the besieged buildings of tomorrow. Police today are learning to wait, to resist the easy appeal of charging in there and getting it over with.

It is the beginning of a sophistication we may need much of, however offensive it may be to ideals of swift justice. The day may come when the news bulletins tell us of the first terrorist group with an atomic bomb.

Raids Are Payback For '73, Dentist Says

By COURTNEY BARRETT
Observer Staff Writer

Wednesday, normally Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins's day off, turned into "payback day" with a phone call confirming that armed violence in Washington was revenge for a 1973 shooting in which his daughter was critically wounded and three of her children drowned.

He learned his son-in-law was one of the gunmen holding more than 100 hostages.

"I have been concerned about all of them," Hawkins said of Washington's Hanafi Muslim order, which was claiming responsibility for the takeover of a Jewish religious center and the Islamic Center. Armed men who burst into Washington's city hall were also believed to be members of the group.

"I've been trying to teach them not to think of revenge," Hawkins said, "but evidently I was unsuccessful."

Hawkins's daughter, Bibi Khaalis, was shot five times in the 1973 shooting at the group's mosque in Washington and is paralyzed. Her husband, Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, heads the sect and has been identified as one of the gunmen holding more than 100 hostages.

A minister, civil rights activist and former candidate for governor, Hawkins said he talked by telephone about 5 p.m. with members of the sect, who said, "today is payback day."

"They are definitely holding the Jewish center and the Islamic Center," Hawkins said.

Talking by telephone from his home, Hawkins said he was trying desperately to contact Washington police to avert bloodshed, although one person was reported dead.

"My concern is the safety of all of them," Hawkins said.

The 1973 killings, which police believe stemmed from a feud between black sects of the Islamic movement, resulted in the conviction tions of six men. Five are still in prison, but a woman identified as Hawkins's daughter, told reporters Wednesday "they should be dead."

Hawkins said he feels the group is just seeking attention, "but they will kill if they have to. Islamic teaches the same as Christianity — an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

"As a minister, I can't condone violence," Hawkins said. "I can't believe in an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. But I do believe in retribution, that those who do wrong will have to pay."

He said the killings four years ago and the reasons for them "left a very poor taste in my mouth." Hawkins added the slayings resulted from attitudes and tactics that have existed several years.

"But I never thought they would use it against innocent babies."

Outraged

Execution Threats Replace Talk Of Peace

WASHINGTON P — An outraged religious fanatic who once preached peace, now heads a group of terrorists threatening to set up a "killing room" where hostages will be executed and their heads thrown out windows unless demands are met.

The man, born 54 years ago Ernest Timothy McGhee and who now calls himself Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, directed the armed, bloody takeover of three buildings here yesterday. Abdul Khaalis, the son-in-law of Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins, included among demands made yesterday revenge for a 1973 incident in which his wife Bibi was shot and three of her children drowned.

Scores of hostages were taken in the siege, one person was killed and a dozen wounded.

"We are fighting for our lives in the name of Allah and a witness for our prophet," Abdul Khaalis said yesterday. "Now you know a crime has been perpetrated upon us, a heinous crime. And nobody spoke up or said anything, offered no condolences. Not even a storefront church."

Abdul Khaalis, angry, shouting at times, abruptly switching thoughts, spoke by telephone with reporters through the day and night yesterday from his "command post" in the cafeteria at B'nai B'rith's national headquarters. Nearly 60 hostages are being held there.

Abdul Khaalis once preached non-violence and brotherhood and wrote that America should be a country "not based on skin power and gun power." But that was before 1973 when seven members of his Hanafi Moslem sect, including the members of his family, were murdered in their Washington headquarters.

At the trial of Black Muslims charged in the deaths, he shouted at the defendants: "You killed my babies! You killed my babies and shot my women!" He was fined $750 for contempt. One of his demands was to get that money back and police gave it to him last night.

The murderers, the fine, "Zionist Jews" and a movie about the prophet Mohammad were the focus of his warnings and demands.

Asked if he would wait indefinitely, he snapped: "Don't worry, when the heads start dropping out the window, then you worry."

Sunni Moslem after leaving the Catholic Church. In 1967 he was a street cleaner in New York, and established a Hanafi center in Harlem.

Abdul Khaalis said he was graduated from the City College of New York and at various times played the drums in several New York area big bands and was an employe of the New York Urban League. He has said he was introduced to Islam during 1949 and 1950 by a Pakistani, then joined the Black Muslims, intending to convert its members.

He ran a Black Muslim high school in Chicago. He was national secretary before he split with Muslim leader, Elijah Muhammad in 1958.

In December 1972, he sent an angry letter to the 57 temples of the Nation of Islam, branding Elijah Muhammad "a lying deceiver," guilty of "fooling and deceiving people — robbing them of their money, and besides all that dooming them to hell."

Twenty days later came the bloodbath at Abdul Khaalis' headquarters. The murders took place while he was shopping for groceries in an Harlem grocery store.

Terrorists Hold 100 Hostage In D.C.

By BROOKS JACKSON

Associated Press

WASHINGTON.— Machete-wielding terrorists, bent on revenge against Black Muslim leaders they blame for a 1973 mass murder, held more than 100 hostages in three buildings today, and threatened to chop off captives' heads unless demands for retribution are met.

Police and the terrorists were at a standoff after a tense night during which a man who identified himself as Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, the leader of the gunmen who had invaded and occupied three buildings, talked frequently with reporters by telephone.

Asked if he expected his demand that Muslim leaders be delivered to him to be met, the terrorist said, "If they don't, the worst is to come, yet, the worst is to come... I'm prepared to die."

City officials said unidentified diplomats were involved in efforts to negotiate with the terrorists. Abdul Khaalis confirmed he had talked to representatives of foreign nations.

The gunmen all were believed to be members of the tiny, predominantly black Hanafi Moslem sect. They seized the headquarters of a Jewish social service organization an Islamic mosque and the District of Columbia City Hall.

During the takeover of City Hall, a black reporter for a Washington radio station was killed and a city councilman and three other persons were wounded. Eight other persons were injured during the takeover of the building housing the headquarters of B'nai B'rith, the Jewish service organization. Three of those eight were still hostages.

Shortly after dawn, the gunmen released a woman from the B'nai B'rith building after they were told she had a heart condition. She was taken to a hospital where a spokesman said she was unharmed.

Police said the men were armed with rifles, shotguns, automatic weapons and machetes.

The siege continued through the night with police uncertain how many hostages were being held and how many terrorists were in the buildings.

The largest group of hostages was being held in the eighth-floor cafeteria of the B'nai B'rith headquarters, seven blocks north of the White House. An official of B'nai B'rith estimated that as many as 118 people were in the hands of the terrorists.

Another 14 hostages were being held at the Islamic Center on Washington's Embassy Row and seven were inside the District Building, located on Pennsylvania Avenue within sight of the White House grounds.

Members of families of the B'nai B'rith hostages waited in the nearby Foundry Methodist Church for some word of the fate of the hostages. The night passed without word.

As the siege wore on, conversations with one of the terrorists and with another Hanafi-Moslem had an ominous tone.

In a telephone conversation from the B'nai B'rith building, Khalafi Hamaas Abdul Khaalis was asked if he would hold out indefinitely. He told an Associated Press reporter, "Don't worry, when the heads start dropping out the window, then you worry."

Abdul Khaalis described himself as the leader of the Hanafi Moslems.

His son-in-law, Abdul Aziz, was contacted in the northwest Washington headquarters of the Hanafi Moslems where the murders took place four years ago. Abdul Aziz told reporters that if the demands of the terrorists were not met, "heads will be chopped off. A killing room will be set up at B'nai B'rith and heads will be thrown out of windows."

Mayor Walter Washington, who had been barricaded in his city hall office for several hours early in the takeover but later escaped the building, said early today that foreign diplomats were involved in discussions with the Hanafi gunmen.

Revenge for the brutal 1973 murders of seven Hanafis, six of whom were Abdul Khaalis' children, appeared to be the principal motive for the sudden invasion of the three buildings late Wednesday morning. Five Philadelphia Black Muslims were convicted of the 1973 slayings, and each was sentenced to 140 years in prison.

In telephone conversations with newsmen, Abdul Khaalis blamed Black Muslim leaders, including heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali, for the slayings of his children and demanded that authorities turn the Muslims over to him. In addition to Ali, he listed as Muslim leaders Wallace D. Muhammad, now head of the movement; his brother, Herbert Muhammad, and former Philadelphia Muslim leader Jeremiah Muslim Shabazz.

Other demands made by Abdul Khaalis during the telephone conversations were:

• That authorities turn over those responsible for the slaying of his children. He named heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali, Muslim leader Wallace D. Muhammad, his brother Herbert Muhammad and former Philadelphia Muslim leader Jeremiah Muslim Shabazz.

• That authorities turn over the murderers of Malcolm X, who like Khaalis was a member of the Black Muslims before breaking with them.

• The return of a $750 fine assessed against him for shouting at the Muslim defendants during their trial for the 1973 Hanafi murders. Police returned the money Wednesday night.

• A halt to the screening of the movie "Muhammad, Messenger of God," which was scheduled for its American premiere on Wednesday in New York and Los Angeles. The distributor immediately stopped the film in mid-screening after learning of Abdul Khaalis' demand. Abdul Khaalis said the film was "a fairy tale" that demeaned and distorted the Islamic faith, although few other Moslems have objected to it.

During one of his conversations with an Associated Press reporter, Abdul Khaalis was asked if he had set a deadline for meeting his demands.

"No, we're not going to set deadlines," he replied. "This way we're going to find out that I'm not joking. They can play if they want to and this way they can find out that I'm not joking."

Asked about a report he was negotiating with diplomats from Middle Eastern nations, Abdul Khaalis said, "Not that I know anything of."

"No, I've told them what has to be done and that's that."

Q. Could you repeat what you said to them?

A. No. I'm just going to ask you one thing. Do you think anybody in here that you call a good citizen and an innocent person is less valuable than those murderers who kill little babies and things?

Q. Do you see a way to end this peacefully?

A. I didn't come in here in peace.

Terrorist's Release 'Frightful'

By JOHN VAUGHAN
News Staff Writer

Today's release by Washington, D.C., authorities of terrorist leader Khalifa Hamaas Abdul Khaalis evoked surprise and concern from three local law-enforcement officials, who said the action may set a dangerous precedent in any future hostage-taking incidents.

But a local judge said he doesn't think it necessarily sets a precedent.

All four — Mecklenburg District Atty. Peter Gilchrist III, Superior Court Judge William Grist, and the two commanders of the Adam and Baker police teams — said the action must have been necessary to secure release of 134 hostages held for two days by Khaalis and his followers in the nation's capital.

Gilchrist called the release of Khaalis "frightful" and questioned whether officials should consider themselves bound by that promise made during negotiations for release of the hostages.

Khaalis surrendered early today. A Washington superior court judge charged him and his 11 followers with armed kidnaping, then released the leader without bond.

"The court is mindful of the events in this city... Nevertheless, the safety and release of the hostages depended on the release of the defendant," Superior Court Chief Judge Harold Greene said.

The only conditions on the release were that Khaalis remain in Washington, not possess firearms and not discuss his case before trial.

"It really does surprise me the man would have been set free," said

Gilchrist. In a first-degree felony case, he said, a judge normally would order the suspect held without any bond.

"We're beginning to see more and more cases where people are held hostage — random acts of violence against people who aren't even involved.

"I can't say how I would have handled the case, because I wasn't on the scene. But I think the precedent that's starting here — gosh, lives have been lost and the guy (Khaalis) is back on the street. It's frightful," Gilchrist said.

He said a more appropriate response by authorities might have been the one followed in Indianapolis several weeks ago. There, a hostage-taker was promised immunity from prosecution if he'd release his captive, but was arrested and charged when he did so.

Authorities there said they didn't consider themselves bound by promises made under pressure from the kidnaper.

Judge Grist said the promise of release given Khaalis was justified because the lives of the Washington hostages had to be given first priority in negotiations.

And the commitment once made, he said, should be honored by authorities.

"I had some misgivings in my own mind about the way authorities handled the case in Indianapolis," Grist said. "But it (response to a terrorist's demands) is a tough decision any time you have to make it."

He said release of Khaalis without bond "doesn't necessarily set a precedent for the next time... Every case must be taken on the basis of the facts."

Maj. R.C. Eidson, commander of the Baker police patrol, said he was very surprised at Khaalis's release. "My personal opinion is that they (authorities) have set a dangerous precedent here. Of course, I wasn't there. But it looks like they gave up too much in the negotiations."

Maj. J.O. Bowman, Adam patrol commander, echoed Eidson's remarks and expressed concern over future kidnap negotiations.

Dr. Reginald Hawkins, a local dentist and father-in-law to Khaalis, said the leader of the Hanafi Muslim sect "is a very religious man" who will abide by conditions of his release.

"I think the police in Washington understood that. If he gave his word, they can rely on it. And in negotiations, you have to do things that are for the best of all concerned," he said.

"With orthodox Muslims, when they give their word, they mean what they say," said Hawkins. "They're pretty straight people — more so, often, than we as Christians are. They don't tell you one thing and then do another," he said.

Gunmen Face More Charges

Prosecutors Plan To Seek Felony Murder Indictments

From Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Federal prosecutors say they will seek felony murder indictments against the small band of Hanafi Moslems who held 134 hostages during a 38-hour siege that terrorized the nation's capital.

Four of the gunmen, including their leader, are free without bail. All 12 were charged with armed kidnapping yesterday after they laid down their swords and rifles and released unharmed the hostages held at three locations since Wednesday.

Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, 55, the leader, returned to his heavily guarded home after a pre-dawn arraignment that was part of the deal he struck with authorities negotiating the surrender.

"It was only done to save human lives," said U.S. Atty. Earl Silbert.

The District of Columbia's liberal bail law won the release later of three more of the Moslems. The eight others were held in lieu of surety bonds of $50,000 to $75,000.

Despite cuts and rope burns, none of the hostages released at the siege's end were hospitalized. But four persons wounded when the violence began Wednesday remained hospitalized, including a gunshot victim doctors say may be paralyzed from the waist down for life.

Funeral services will be held Monday for Maurice Williams, 24, the radio reporter shot down in the district's city hall who was the lone fatality.

Sword- and machete-carrying Hanafi guards continued to patrol outside the northwest Washington home that a co-religionist, basketball star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, purchased for the group in 1971.

Meanwhile, theaters in New York and Los Angeles planned to resume showing the film "Mohammad, Messenger of God" today.

The theaters stopped showing the film Wednesday at the demand of Abdul Khaalis, who said it insulted his religion.

Also released without bond were three Wheaton, Md. brothers, Abdul Al Qawee, 22, Abdul Rahim, 27, and Abdul Rahman, 37. Before becoming Hanafi Moslems, they were known as Sam, Clyde and Phillip Young.

Superior Court Judge H. Carl Moultrie said local law gave him little choice but to free them, since they had no criminal records and had stable employment histories. There was no evidence they were likely to flee, said Moultrie, adding, "The judges don't make the laws."

The brothers were arrested at the Islamic Center, where no hostages were seriously harmed in the takeover.

But Silbert and assistant U.S. Atty. Martin J. Litsky said the government would ask a grand jury for felony murder indictments against all 12. There was no indication when the grand jury might begin sifting through the possible charges, ranging from trespassing to murder.

Armed kidnapping, punishable by 20 years in jail, was the only charge leveled at the arraignments. The defendants could be charged with separate counts for each hostage taken.

Under the district's law, anyone who participates in a felony during which a murder is committed can be charged with felony murder.

The two arrested at the District Building, where the slaying took place, were held on $50,000 bonds. They were Abdul Muzikir, 22, and Abdul Nuh, 28, both of Washington.

Police went to the Moslems' house yesterday to check out a bomb scare that proved false. Abdul Khaalis came to the door to talk with them.

Abdul Khaalis must return to police headquarters Monday to be fingerprinted. Preliminary hearings for the rest start on March 21. The leader's hearing is scheduled for March 31.

Whatever charges are brought against the 12, they do not face the penalty they said they wanted to exact: death for the people who killed seven women and children in the Hanafi residence in 1973.

Four Black Muslims have been convicted in those murders.

The District of Columbia does not have capital punishment.

Moultrie warned each defendant not to talk about the case except to his lawyer and not to do anything to change his appearance by shaving a beard or growing a mustache.

The three released were not specifically ordered, as another judge instructed Abdul Khaalis, to get rid of all firearms.

President Carter was personally involved in the ending of the siege yesterday.

Three Middle Eastern ambassadors had to overcome the reluctance of American officialdom before setting up the face-to-face confrontation that ended the siege of Hanafi terrorists, Iranian ambassador Ardeshir Zahedi said yesterday.

President Carter, acting through Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell, at first did not want to give permission for the personal meeting with terrorist leader Abdul Khaalis, Zahedi said.

"If anything happened to us, he would have felt morally guilty," he added. Zahedi and the other ambassadors, Ashraf Ghorbal of Egypt and Sahabzada Yaqub-khan of Pakistan, are all Moslems.

It was not until late Thursday that "we got the blessing of the President," through Bell, to proceed with plans for the dramatic face-down with Khaalis, Zahedi said.

The release of four of the defendants provoked anger in Congress.

Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen declared in a Senate speech: "A promise made at the point of a gun has no moral force whatsoever. Khaalis was free ... at liberty with family and friends, even before his hostages were home, even before the funeral of the assassinated reporter."

Black Muslim leader Wallace D. Muhammad says he is afraid for his life while Abdul Khaalis is free without bail.

Muhammad made the statement yesterday at a news conference in his South Side mosque after Abdul Khaalis was freed.

12 Charged With Armed Kidnaping

Terrorist Free,

Hostages

Safe

(Observer Wire Reports)

WASHINGTON — Four Hanafi Moslem terrorists were freed without bail and eight others were jailed Friday after they were charged with armed kidnaping.

Their 38-hour siege ended dramatically early Friday with the safe release of 134 hostages.

Church bells pealed and horns blared a chorus of relief at the release.

"I feel as if I'm born again," hostage Gayuzia Bayumi declared.

Prosecutors said they would seek to indict all 12 terrorists for murder in the death of Maurice Williams, a black radio station reporter killed by gunfire in the takeover of the District of Columbia city hall.

It was one of three sites occupied Wednesday by the gunmen.

First to be set free was Hanafi leader Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, 54, who had threatened repeatedly to chop off the heads of his hostages.

Prosecutors promised him freedom pending trial in return for their release.

The three-hour, late-night negotiations were handled by three Islamic ambassadors who quoted to Khaalis from the Koran, the Moslem holy book.

Ironically, the three Moslem statesmen did their negotiating in the lobby of the B'nai B'rith headquarters, bargaining for the lives of more than 100 Jews among the hostages.

Also set free Friday were three Hanafis who had seized the Islamic Center mosque without firing a shot and without injuring any hostages.

Superior Court Judge Carl Moultrie said the District of Columbia's liberal bail law left him no choice but to release them because their charges might be lighter than the rest.

The law requires release without bail if defendants have community ties and are not a threat or liable to flee the court's reach.

"The judges don't make the laws," Moultrie said. "We only carry them out."

Bail was set at $50,000 each for two who took over the District Building, where Williams was killed and three others wounded.

Of those who helped Khaalis seize the headquarters of the Jewish service organization B'nai B'rith, where several persons were wounded, four had bail set at $50,000 and two at $75,000.

Prosecutors said all 12 defendants could draw prison terms of 150 years or life if indicted and convicted on murder charges.

U.S. Attorney Earl Silbert said he granted pretrial freedom to Khaalis only as part of the bargain "to save a human life."

He asked that the others be jailed with high bail because they "inflicted a reign of terror not only on these people (the hostages) but on this city, the nation's capital."

In other developments:

- Six of the gunmen's victims remained hospitalized, two in serious condition. City Councilman Marion Barry, recovering from a chest wound inflicted in the takeover of city hall, was released.

- The funeral was scheduled for 11 a.m. Monday for Williams. His employer, radio station WHUR-FM, announced it would set up a scholar-

● Black Muslim leader Wallace Muhammad said in Chicago he feared for his life because Khaalis is free. Muhammad is among those Khaalis blames for the brutal slaying of his children four years ago.

Muhammad has denied responsibility for the slayings but said Friday he would not have stopped them if he had been given the chance, because Khaalis had threatened the late Muslim leader Elijah Muhammad, Wallace's father.

● The film, "Mohammad, Messenger Of God," was scheduled to resume public exhibitions today. Screenings were halted in the middle of its American premiere Wednesday because the terrorists demanded its cancellation on grounds it is offensive to strict Moslems.

Early Friday, church bells rang in celebration when the remaining hostages were freed. All were examined at a hospital and sent home, some after treatment for minor injuries.

President Carter praised Washington city officials for their "slow and careful approach."

The president also said he sent personal letters of thanks to the ambassadors of Iran, Egypt and Pakistan for talking the Hanafi leader into surrendering.

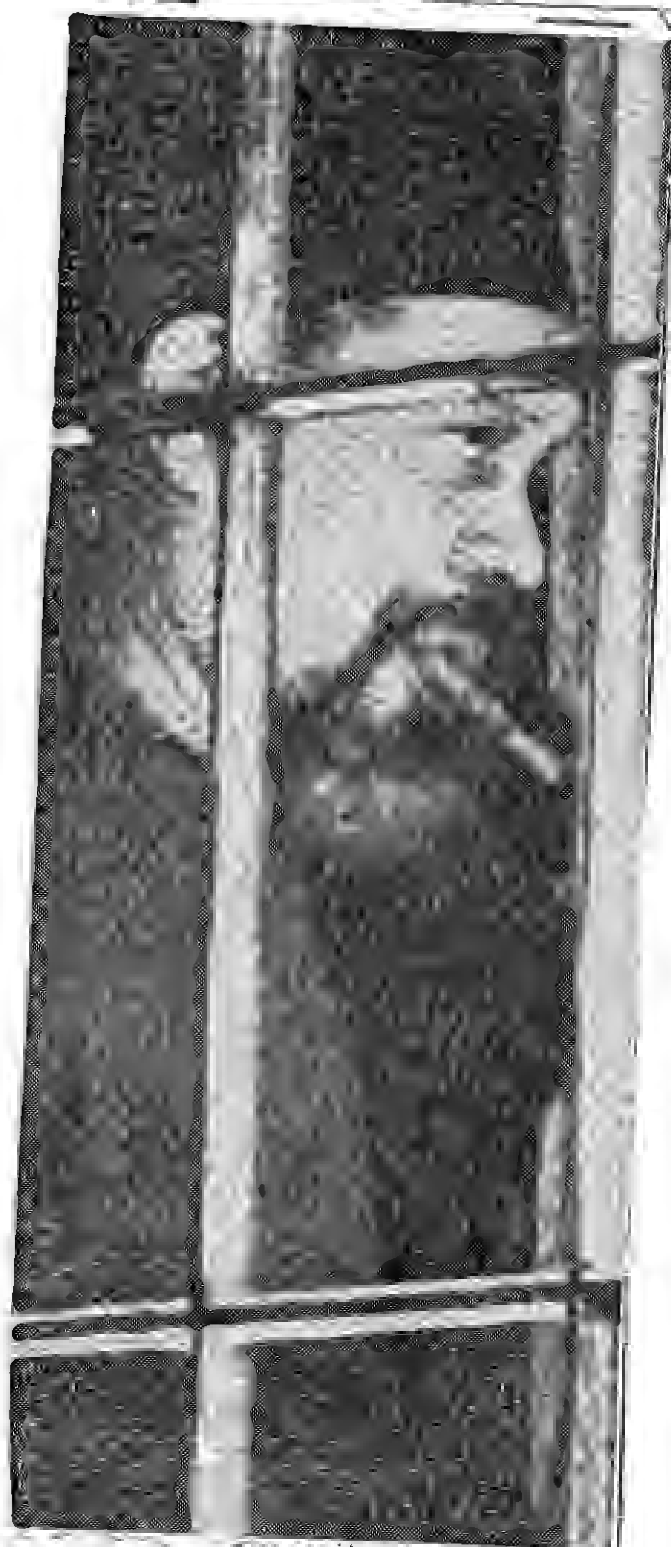

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance called the three ambassadors "humanitarians and diplomats in the highest sense."

An Extremely Elated Hostage Reunited With Friends

Two harrowing days were over early Friday

(Mount Clipping in Space Below)

Hostages Celebrate Life With Poetry And Prayer

WASHINGTON — We all have changed a little bit," says Shelly Hanan, who survived 38 hours last week as a hostage.

"Nobody walked out of that room unchanged. Nobody.

"But," she adds, "I'm not going to let it leave a scar."

That ringing affirmation of life, sounded by a 27-year-old Jewish bookkeeper, is being echoed by other hostages exploring the meaning of their ordeal.

All vowed to go on with life, expressing a desire to return to the routine disrupted when Hanafi Moslem gunmen stormed the headquarters of the B'nai B'rith Jewish service organization last Wednesday. (The Hanafi leader, Hamaas Abdul Khallis and 11 followers were booked on criminal charges Monday.)

All said they had been overwhelmed with love, from family or friends, on their release.

Far from being depressed, they felt restless and exhilarated.

"There was almost a jubilation, with flowers and fruit and gifts and poetry and people of all denominations saying prayers," said Mimi Feldman of Arlington, Va.

"I was bewildered because I expected that once I got home, I would go anonymously up to my room and just rest up."

Most said they resolved to return to the building where they worked.

"It's like a car accident," said Natalie Lerner, an accountant who was taken hostage at B'nai B'rith. "You must go back into the automobile in order to have your confidence again. I don't think I'll stay away forever. I will go back."

"The worst thing to do is not to go back," Ms. Hanan said. "You just have to be strong. You can't be weak."

"I doubt sincerely that this will leave a scar on my life," Ms. Feldman said. "I'm very much the same person. I don't have deep psychological fears, or feel something unforeseen lurking about. I don't think I'm going to become a scared rabbit. It would be contrary to my nature."

Since her release, she added, she has had difficulty sleeping and eating. But she promised to "settle down and go about the business of living...."

"I want to go on," she said. "I want to wash dishes, I want to do my laundry, I want to shop and I want to go to work. I just want to go on and play my role as I always did. I think that would be the best medication for me."

Then, like other hostages hoping for a return to normality, she said, "I'm not a heroine. I'm not unique. I was just one of many. I don't want this to alter my life or to make me very timid or afraid of my shadow."

Shelly Hanan explained, "I've changed by just being faced with death. I appreciate life more than I ever did now. I think we all do. We all really cherish it right now. We cherish one another, too."

Rabbi Samuel Fishman of Bethesda, Md., who works for the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, said last week's ordeal "fit all too neatly" into the experience of being Jewish.

"Those of us who are in touch with our people's history saw familiar features," he said. "We were captured as Jews and harangued with the worst sort of anti-Semitic drivel. We were threatened because of our Jewishness. We were even accused of being owners of slaves."

But, he added, "The experience of being Jewish will enable us to put this into perspective. Our tradition teaches us to affirm life."

Violent Death Ends Reporter's Dreams

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Washington Afro-American reporter Stephen Colter remembered that he and Maurice Williams spent their lunch hour last Wednesday discussing one of Williams' deepest concerns — the role of a black journalist.

Williams

Williams, a 24-year-old Washington radio reporter, and Colter covered the District of Columbia government for small, predominantly black audiences, and they debated whether it would be right for them to move to better-paying jobs with wider audiences at white-owned newspapers and broadcast stations.

"He had decided that communications was it," recalled another friend of Williams, Drexel Yarborough. "It was his effort to reach up by reaching within for the truth. He wanted to move faster, and was just getting to the point where he was really growing."

Williams and Colter did not reach any conclusions in their luncheon discussion. They walked back to the District Building for a press conference in the City Council chairman's office. But just after they stepped out of the elevator on the fifth floor, the doors of the City Council offices swung open, a shotgun fired and Williams, shot in the chest, spun around and fell.

Colter was among nearly 800 people who joined Williams's parents, three brothers and other family members Monday to mourn the death of the one person killed during last week's 38-hour armed takeover of the District Building by two Hanafi Moslems.

Also in attendance were Mayor Walter Washington, the entire City Council, D.C. Delegate to the U.S. House Walter Fauntroy, co-workers from WHUR and other news media, and Iranian Ambassador Ardeshtir Zahedi, who helped negotiate an end to the Hanafi seige.

The irony of Williams's death, many of his friends said, was his brief life had been marked by conditions quite opposite to those that brought it to an end.

"The only violence in Maurice's life was the violence he saw and tried to stop. The most he had time to do was love," said Yarborough, whose friendship with Williams began in kindergarten in northwest Washington. "Maurice was brilliant enough to have an ever-listening ear, and that warranted his having something to say as a journalist."

Violence: 'It Is Upon Us'

By CATHY STEELE ROCHE
News Staff Writer

Violence.

"We have predicted it, we have written about it, now it is upon us. I don't believe in violence. I have preached against it, but I'm not so naive that I don't understand it."

Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins reflected about an era of world terrorism this morning as he waited for word on the siege of three Washington buildings by members of a Muslim sect led by his son-in-law, Khalafi Hamaas Abdul Khaalis.

"This is the era of terrorism. The churches have failed to deal with it. You have people who are no longer willing to undergo the types of suffering and humiliation they have in the past. The rest of the world needs to realize we are dealing in a new era. There need to be new relationships between people," Hawkins said from his Charlotte home.

The Hanafi Muslim sect is apparently seeking revenge for the killing of Hawkins' three grandchildren and four other persons by members of a rival Muslim sect four years ago. Hawkins' daughter, Bibi Khaalis, the former Paulette Hawkins, was shot several times in the head during the earlier attack and is still paralyzed.

"These people will kill. Anyone who holds someone hostage with a gun ... they will kill. They will kill themselves and they will kill other people," Hawkins said.

A civil rights activist and former candidate for governor in North Carolina, Hawkins said he tried to convince Khaalis and other members of the Hanafi Muslim sect not to seek revenge for the 1973 killings.

"It's my concern that violence is creeping in all over the world. I have foreseen this coming. I think this condition is upon us. Violence and all forms of violence are upon us. What the CIA is doing, what's happening in Uganda, in Ireland, in this country, in Chile ... I think we're living through violent times."

Hawkins said, "The reason is the haves against the have-nots — people who have suffered under oppression and are no longer willing to take it."

Observer Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Three groups of heavily armed men, members of a black Muslim sect, seized 100 hostages in coordinated assaults Wednesday, killing a radio reporter and injuring at least 11 persons.

The invaders, armed with guns and machetes, took over the headquarters of the B'nai B'rith Jewish organization, a Moslem religious center and Washington's city hall.

They appeared to be led by Hamzaas Abdul Khaalis, son-in-law of Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins. Apparently they were seeking revenge for a 1973 incident in which Khaalis's wife Bibi was shot and three of her children drowned.

"I want the killers of my babies," Khaalis told a reporter. "I say we want them right here. I want to see how tough they are."

Khaalis told an Associated Press reporter by telephone that the men he sought included Wallace and Herbert Muhammad, and heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali, all leading Black Muslims.

The gunmen also demanded and got cancellation of the premiere of a movie about the Islamic prophet Muhammad.

As the takeovers unfolded, at least 11 persons were injured — shot, stabbed or beaten.

Washington City Councilman Marion Barry was shot in the chest and, for several hours, Mayor Walter Washington barricaded himself in his office against the intruders. He finally made his way to safety, under guard.

"I heard two shots and dived to the right," Barry said. "And then I felt a hot, burning sensation in my chest. I knew I'd been shot."

The bullet struck him just above the heart. "The bullet stopped in front of the heart without penetrating bone," said Dr. Howard Champion, director of the Washington Hospital's shock trauma center.

The siege continued into the night, in buildings ringed by police who sealed off the areas involved, including Pennsylvania Avenue, close by the White House, and Massachusetts Avenue, in the heart of Embassy Row.

During the day, about 40 hostages were released by the terrorists or escaped at B'nai B'rith, seven blocks from the White House, where an official said the gunmen were freeing captives who were not Jews.

At the mosque, where about 15 hostages were held, a gunman told Assistant Police Chief Burtell Jefferson the intruders were "prepared to stay there indefinitely."

Jefferson said he was told no hostages there had been harmed and none would be unless police rushed the building. "I assured him that wouldn't happen."

The one known death occurred at the city hall, known as the District of Columbia Building.

Radio station WHUR said Maurice Williams, 22, a staff reporter, was killed.

According to a witness, Williams and a security guard emerged from an elevator when a gunman spotted the guard and fired, hitting Williams.

"I'm shot," Williams said.

Police said a building guard also was shot and lay for hours within range of the intruders' guns. He was thought to be dead, but when rescuers reached him Wednesday night, they found him alive and took him to a hospital for surgery.

Police said there was no question the invasions at B'nai B'rith and the Moslem center were the work of members of the predominantly black Hanafi Muslim sect. They were officially less sure Muslims held the city hall, although several reports indicated that was the case.

Victims of the 1973 slayings were members of the Hanafi sect.

J.E. Sarnie, a police spokesman, said the gunmen talked to each other by telephone.

The gunmen demanded the Wednesday premiere in New York of the film, "Mohammad, Messenger of God," be canceled. They said it ridiculed their faith.

Moslem doctrine forbids showing pictures of the prophet Muhammad.

Showings were canceled in New York and Los Angeles. The film was stopped midway through in four New York theaters and patrons were offered refunds or rain checks.

It all happened within hours. First, around 11 a.m., came the strike at B'nai B'rith, a Jewish service organization.

(Mike Shapiro, district representative for B'nai B'rith in Charlotte, said that, "to the best of my knowledge," no Carolinians were at the Washington office.)

Then, at least one gunman invaded the Islamic Center, a mosque on Embassy Row. Next came the shootings at the District of Columbia Building, within sight of the White House grounds.

President Carter ordered the FBI into the case.

FBI Director Clarence Kelley said Carter ordered the bureau to investigate "all violations of federal law involved in the terrorist-type activities being perpetrated in the Washington... area."

At all three buildings, police riflemen and special weapons units stood at the ready.

"We're just sitting and staring at each other," said a woman barricaded in her fifth floor office at the B'nai B'rith building. She said there were five co-workers with her. The Hanafi group is independent of the much larger Black Muslims. The Hanafis are thought to number about 1,000 in the United States.

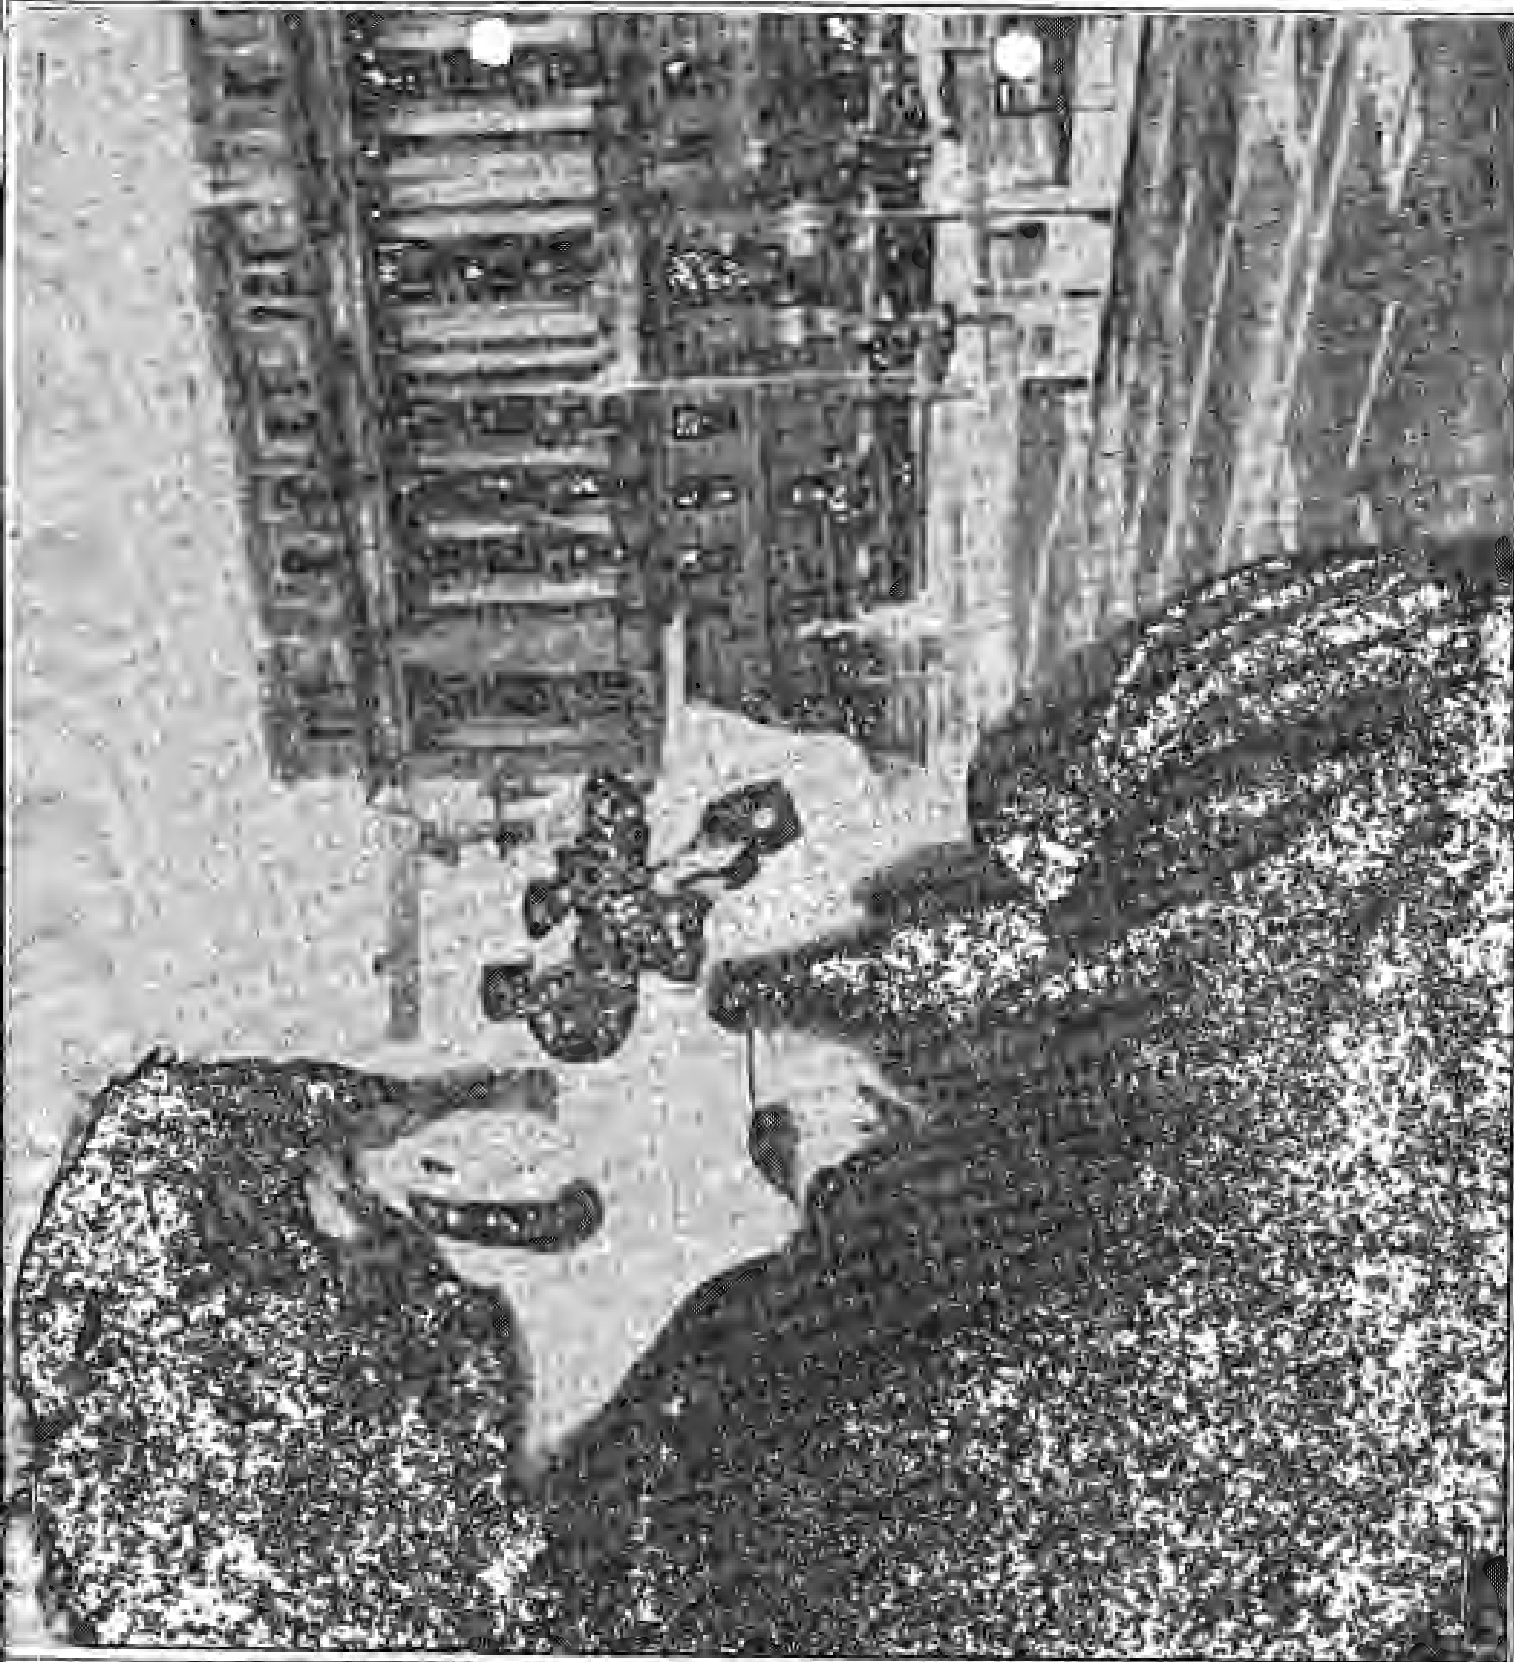

In January 1973, seven Hanafi sect members, five of them children (including Hawkins's relatives), were killed in Washington, in a house owned by professional basketball star Kareem Abdul Jabbar.

Five men associated with the Black Muslim mosque in Philadelphia were convicted of the murders and are serving long sentences.

Sect, Muslims Split On Beliefs

Islam, which in Arabic means "submission to God," is the religion of which Muhammad is the Prophet.

Adherents are called Moslems or Muslims and also Muhammedans.

The Hanafi sect follows a literal interpretation of the Koran and considers itself the only true follower of Islam. Their membership in the United States is said to be less than 1,000, most of them black.

The so-called Black Muslims, based in Chicago, are a much larger religious organization that follows the beliefs of the late Elijah Muhammad, as well as certain teachings of the Bible and the Koran.

Members of this group now call themselves Bilalians and are known formally as the World Community of Islam in the West.

By communication dated March 31, 1977, Washington Field Office advised all SAC's as follows concerning captioned matters:

For the information of receiving offices, 11 of the 12 individuals involved in the takeover of three buildings, Washington, D. C., have been incarcerated since surrender to Metropolitan Police Department, March 12, 1977.

The leader of the sect, HAMAAS ABDUL KHAALIS, was released on personal recognizance under conditions prescribed by the court.

Information has been received by Washington Field that KHAALIS has violated the terms of his bond and that it is the intention of the Government to have his bond revoked, March 31, 1977, when KHAALIS appears at 2 p.m. for a preliminary hearing. KHAALIS in the past has expressed extreme dislike of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and as a result of information provided to the United States Attorney's Office by the FBI which will result in the revocation of his bond, it is possible that KHAALIS will direct members of the sect to take retaliatory action against the FBI for in effect placing him in jail.

Hanafi Chief Khaalis Jailed

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, free since his Hanafi Moslem band held 134 hostages, was jailed Thursday after a judge was told a police wiretap recorded Khaalis making "blood-curdling threats."

Chief Judge Harold Greene of the District of Columbia Superior Court said he did not regard the threats "as idle words" and revoked the no-money, personal recognition bond that freed Khaalis hours after the hostages were released.

"I think there are realistic indications that the defendant, if he remains at large, poses a danger to the community," Greene said after a three-hour hearing.

Twenty minutes after the hearing ended, Treasury agents arrested Khaalis' son-in-law, Abdul Aziz, on charges of violating federal firearms laws. Details of the charge were not available. Aziz acted as the Hanafi spokesman during the 38 hours hostages were held, but took no part in the incident.

Immediately after the judge acted, U.S. marshals surrounded Khaalis and took him to jail under heavy guard.

All 12 Hanafis who seized three buildings three weeks ago are in jail awaiting grand jury action. They are charged with armed kidnapping. Nine are held in lieu of $50,000 bond, two in lieu of $75,000.

U.S. Atty. Earl Silbert told Greene a wiretap had been placed on Khaalis' home-headquarters in northwest Washington. Tuesday, he said, Aziz telephoned Khaalis and said he had been searched on returning from "some Arab country."

Silbert said Khaalis shouted, "I'll kill all 200 people today. Tell them I'll let some of my men go. We're going to get the government for this. They're up to their --- now; if they are going to get rough, we are going to get rough."

Khaalis' lawyer, former Superior Court Judge Harry Alexander, said "it takes a great stretch of imagination ... to see Mr. Khaalis as a danger to the community."

Greene said Khaalis' remarks "contained no serious threat if they were standing alone ... but these threats do not stand alone. Mr. Khaalis has on previous occasions made threats and on March 9, 10, and 11 carried them out. In that case, I don't regard them as idle words."

The following investigation was conducted by Special Agent J. RALPH JONES:

On March 29, 1977, Deputy Sheriff MELVIN ROBERTS, Wilkes County Sheriff's Office, Wilkesboro, North Carolina, advised that he is acquainted with CATHY REDMON PARKS who resides on Route 7, North Wilkesboro, North Carolina, as he arrested her former husband, ROY PARKS, several times for nonsupport during the time CATHY and ROY were separating.

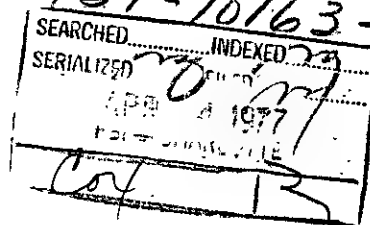

He described her as a very timid and shy female, one who had to be encouraged by her family to take out warrants against her former husband, and he stated that she had never been out of Wilkes County for any appreciable time to his knowledge and was not the type, in his opinion, to become associated with any type of activist.

On March 30, 1977, Mrs. CATHY REDMON PARKS, Route 7, Box 81, North Wilkesboro, North Carolina, was advised that inquiry was being made because someone in Washington, D. C., had used a North Carolina driver's license number which possibly could be hers, and she exhibited her driver's license which did have the North Carolina number 2677432.

She said this driver's license has not been out of her possession, she has not been to Washington, D. C., doesn't know anyone in Washington, D. C., and has never heard of any Muslim group and did not have any clear understanding of what that group was supposed to be.

Mrs. PARKS stated that she is unemployed and lives with her daughter at this address which is a trailer located close to her parents' home.

Mrs. PARKS stated she had never heard of a PAULETTA HOPKINS and that definitely no one had used her driver's license.

WILLIAM E. TILLMAN, 1115 Norris Avenue, Charlotte, North Carolina, was interviewed on April 4, 1977, at which time he voluntarily furnished the following information:

He was married for about ten years to EDNA SLATER TILLMAN. They lived together at this address until about a year ago when she moved out and bought herself a house at 2021 Finchley Drive, Charlotte. They had no children, but EDNA had four children by her previous marriage to a man named REDFEARN. Her youngest daughter, DORIS McCAIN, nee REDFEARN, is separated from her husband, ALF McCAIN, and she is living with EDNA. The other three children are WILLIAM REDFEARN, who lives in Cleveland, Ohio; T. C. "TONY" REDFEARN, who is in prison in Columbus, Ohio, for armed robbery; and EUNICE ROBINSON, nee REDFEARN, who is separated from her husband, JOE ROBINSON. They have about two children. EUNICE has been living in Shaker Heights, Ohio, and has been employed there or in Cleveland as a letter carrier for the U. S. Post Office. EUNICE had a boyfriend, name unknown, who set himself afire about a month ago and burned to death in Cleveland. She recently came to Charlotte and moved in with her mother at 2021 Finchley Drive. It is not yet known whether she plans to remain here permanently.

Mr. TILLMAN stated that, to the best of his knowledge, none of EDNA's children are connected with the Hanafi Muslim Sect, and he had no information that any of them had visited the headquarters of this organization in Washington, D. C., in the recent past.

Mr. TILLMAN added that EDNA TILLMAN is employed as Manager of the Snack Shop at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

EUNICE ROBINSON, nee REDFEARN, was interviewed at the residence of her mother, Mrs. EDNA TILLMAN, 2021 Finchley Drive, Charlotte, North Carolina, on April 13, 1977, at which time she voluntarily furnished the following information:

She first became aware of and interested in the Hanafi Muslim Sect (HMS) last year when she was living in Shaker Heights, Ohio. At that time she was separated from her husband, JOE ROBINSON, and was living at 3536 Hildana, Shaker Heights, Ohio, with her three small children. Her brother, T. C. (TONY) REDFEARN, had been living in Cleveland, Ohio, at 1416 East Boulevard, but was then serving a term in prison at Lucasville, Ohio, for aggravated robbery. He is still there. In prison he met some inmates who were affiliated with HMS and through talking with them he became a member of this sect. When he wrote to EUNICE, and when she visited him, he told her about this new religion and she became very interested and began to write to the Headquarters of HMS in Washington, D. C.

In November, 1976, her home was destroyed by fire and she moved to another apartment in Shaker Heights. She was not then working regularly, so she decided to go to Washington, D. C., to the Headquarters of HMS to learn more about this sect. She took her children and her clothing with her when she left and she arrived in Washington, D. C., January 8, 1977. She had planned to remain about four days and when she arrived and made contact with this group they sent her to the HMS house at 2318 Arcola Avenue, Wheaton, Maryland.

They took her to the HMS Headquarters in Washington, D. C., for a visit and there she met the leader of the group, HAMAAS ABDUL KHAALIS. Then she went back to the house on Arcola Avenue in Wheaton, Maryland, and they asked her to stay permanently. She decided that she would stay but she was not certain that she believed in the things they believed in.

She stated that she was sworn in as a member on January 24, 1977, in a ceremony called Shadatda. She stated that they never seemed to trust her; however, and she never considered herself to be an actual member as she was always asking them questions and never received satisfactory answers. She decided she did not want to stay and it appeared they did not want her to stay and actually asked her to leave, but she did not have enough money. She told them she could not leave until she had some help. She said that KHAALIS sent word that he would give her the money but she refused to take it.

She then got in touch with her brother, WILLIAM REDFEARN, who lives in Richmond, Virginia, but was then in Charlotte, North Carolina. He came up to Washington, D. C., but the members at the house told her he would not be permitted to come inside the house. She also had been in contact with her mother, EDNA TILIMAN, in Charlotte, North Carolina, and her mother drove up on March 19, 1977, to find out how EUNICE was getting along. Her mother was very much opposed to this organization and wanted her to leave. At first the members would not let her mother in the house but that evening they did permit her mother to come in for a visit.

EUNICE got fed up at the treatment given her mother and brother and she called her mother who was staying in a nearby motel and told her that she planned to leave on March 21, 1977. EUNICE said that she was disillusioned with this group because they tried to turn her against her family. She left the HMS house on March 21, 1977, with her three children and drove to the home of her mother in Charlotte, North Carolina.

EUNICE stated that there were about fifteen people staying at the HMS house on Arcola Avenue, six of whom were adults. The leader was a man named SEIDI. His wife was called KALA. She said their regular name was WRIGHT. There was another couple, a man called SHARIEFF and his wife JALAIKI. EUNICE believed their regular name was HARRISON, but she was not certain. She said there was a single man who slept in the basement and his name was IBRAKIM.

She did not know how many people were living at the HMS Headquarters in Washington, D. C., but believed there were about fifteen people. She knew that KHAALIS, the leader, lived there with two wives, one of whom was BIBI, who was shot in an attack on the house several years ago and who is partially paralyzed. She did not know the names of any others at this house.

EUNICE stated that at the house on Arcola Avenue in Wheaton, Maryland, she had seen a small arsenal in the bedroom of SHARIEFF and JALAIKI on the second floor. This included about ten to fifteen guns which looked like rifles and there were several knives and machetes. In one of the rooms on the first floor, she saw four guns. One was a pistol which looked like a German Luger and one was an automatic rifle as she recalled there was another rifle in this room. She stated that when she came to HMS from Shaker Heights, Ohio, she brought with her a .22 caliber revolver which she had purchased in 1971 at Atlantic Mills, Bedford Heights, Cleveland, Ohio. She had purchased this for her own protection as she lived in a rough neighborhood. She took this with her when she went to Washington, D. C., and she told SEIDI about it. At his request she gave it to him for safekeeping while she was at this house and she never got it back.

She said she never saw any weapons in the Headquarters in Washington, D. C., but did see a young man standing guard outside with a machete in his hand. She said that KHAALIS sometimes wore a small knife attached to a sash draped across his shoulder and chest.

She stated that she believed that KHAALIS was mentally disturbed as he was always talking about fighting. He would say, "We shall fight to the death," but he never did say who his enemies were and who he was going to fight.

EUNICE stated that she had no knowledge at all about the takeover of three buildings in Washington, D. C., by members of HMS and the taking of hostages until she heard about it on the telephone from one of the women at HMS Headquarters after it happened. She said she had not been told anything about this and had no knowledge of it except what was in the news.

EUNICE said that she is very close to her mother and her mother is a devout Christian and is opposed to violence. She realized when she went to Washington, D. C., and moved into the house on Arcola Avenue that the beliefs of this group were contrary to everything she had been taught and she had left as soon as she reasonably could. She said that she did not want to have anything further to do with this group.

She added that her brother, T. C. REDFEARN, had also given up his association with this organization, according to what he has written her. He is still in prison in Lucasville, Ohio.

Mrs. TILLMAN stated that she visited her daughter, EUNICE ROBINSON, at 2318 Arcola Avenue, Wheaton, Maryland, on the weekend of March 19, 1977, because she wanted to see her daughter and find out how her daughter was.
